Ford to Ask 3-Year Review Of Future Busing Cases

WASHINGTON, June 4—President Ford said today that the antibusing legislation he plans to send to Congress would require that every future court case ordering busing be reopened every three years to see whether court jurisdiction could be lifted.

He said that the court would have to give up its jurisdiction "unless it was affirmatively found there had been no correction of the unconstitutional abuses" of desegregation laws.

Mr. Ford's plan, as he outlined it, apparently would allow school systems to escape court supervision after three years if they could prove at least minimal integration.

Oval Office Interview

He said the proposal would limit the courts to correcting areas where there had been an act by the school board that resulted in denying the constitutional rights of individuals.

Mr. Ford also said that he had asked Attorney General Edward H. Levi to determine whether his proposed new legislation could apply retroactively and that he expected to get a reply "very shortly."

He said his decision on making any new laws retroactive would also depend on "whether it is a practical answer."

Ordered to Pay $250,000 Trespass by TV News Crew

By DENA KLEEMAN A lawyer for CBS said yesterday Supreme Court jury verdict posed a threat to all reporters seeking information on private property. Other lawyers in the field said that they know of no precise precedents to this case and that the decision relied on a traditional interpretation of trespass, applied to the press in only a few recent cases.

"The right to publish does not include the right to enter upon or trespass upon the property of these plaintiffs," wrote the presiding judge, Justice Martin B. Stecher, in a pretrial decision regarding a motion to dismiss the trespass charge. Justice Stecher must decide, upon appeal by CBS, whether the verdict should be put aside.

On Thursday, at the close of

I.L.O. TALKS ADMIT THE PALESTINIANS

U.S. Loses in Effort to Bar P.L.O. From Employment Conference in Geneva

By A. H. RASKIN Special to The New York Times

GENEVA, June 4—The United States tonight lost its fight to keep the Palestine Liberation Organization out of the 132-nation World Employment Conference.

The governing body of the International Labor Organization, which had decided by the margin of a single vote last Saturday to bar the Palestinians from the conference, reversed itself under strong pressure from the League of Arab States, the Organization of African Unity and the Soviet bloc.

Despite the rebuff, American Government, labor and employer delegates to the I.L.O. decided not to walk out but to confine their protest to boycotting conference sessions at which the Palestinians speak.

The Americans had earlier hinted that a reversal by the world labor body and the ad-

Pentagon Promotes Rebutted Official To Purchasing Job

By JOHN W. FINNEY Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 4—Dr. Malcolm R. Currie, a high-ranking Pentagon official who was severely reprimanded last March for accepting hospitality from a major defense contractor, has quietly been placed in charge of the development and acquisition of all weapons by the Defense Department.

At present, Dr. Currie is director of defense research and engineering, a post that gives him supervision over the development of all weapons. In an unannounced action, he was recently made "acquisition executive" of the department, thus placing him in charge of procurement as well as development of new weapons.

The department has not made public the elevation of Dr. Currie, which was ordered in a memorandum May 17 by Deputy Defense Secretary William P. Clements Jr. Dr. Currie, a former executive with the Hughes Aircraft Company, now ranks second only to Mr. Clements, a former Texas oil businessman, in the day-by-day management of the Pentagon.

Carter Buying Simultaneous Time on Three Networks

By DENA KLEEMAN CLEVELAND, June 4—Jimmy Carter has purchased simultaneous five-minute spots on the three commercial television networks in an effort to reverse an undercurrent of negative feelings about his candidacy that has been showing up in recent polls and interviews with voters.

His taped talk, which will be broadcast nationally at 10:55 P.M. Eastern daylight time, Sunday, is already showing as a political commercial here in Ohio, where the Democratic front-runner faces a crucial primary test on Tuesday.

In the talk, Mr. Carter speaks in inspirational terms and cautions about his "vision" of the country.

In the process, he seeks to reconcile two sides of his character—the soft-spoken peanut farmer and the relentless politician—that have evidently struck some voters as contradictory and raised the criticism among political opponents that although Mr. Carter has broad appeal, he inspires no intense loyalty.

"Our people," he says, "want a President to be both tough and gentle, both statesman and politician, both dreamer and fighter. You expect him to have the drive and stamina to reach the White House, and the wisdom and patience to govern wisely."

By buying time on the three

WHOLESALE PRICES SLOWED INCREASE TO 0.3% FOR MAY

Index Indicates That Upward Pressure on Inflation Has Moderated Since April

By TERRY ROBARDS

The rate of increase in wholesale prices slowed during May, the Government announced yesterday, providing evidence that the upward pressure on inflation had abated.

The Labor Department reported in Washington that the Wholesale Price Index climbed 0.3 percent last month, compared with an increase of 0.8 percent in April. The rise in April, the largest in six months, had aroused fears of a return to double-digit inflation.

The more moderate increase in May, on the other hand, was hailed by President Ford as "extremely significant" and was interpreted by private economists as an indication that inflation remained under control.

"I feel that the news is very encouraging," said Dimitri Balatsos, vice president and economist for the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Company.

"It should give consumer confidence a very favorable shot in the arm," said Robert Ortner, senior vice president and economist for the Bank of New York.

A Word of Caution

Analysts cautioned, however, that the statistics for May, although encouraging, should not be viewed as conclusive evidence of longer-term trends.

Even as the Labor Department was issuing its report, the United States Steel Corporation and the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation announced price increases on structural steel shapes.

These and other possible increases will show up in the price indexes of future months. They will be balanced against wholesale price trends elsewhere in the economy in determining the future inflation rate.

Changes in wholesale prices tend to precede changes at the retail level by several months, although the relationships are not precise.

The moderation in the rate of wholesale price increases in May was partly attributable to a sharp slowing in the rise of farm product prices. This increase amounted to 0.6 percent, compared with an increase of 4.3 percent in April.

Livestock prices were lower in May following big increases in April, while prices for fresh

JOBLESSNESS CUT TO 17-MONTH LOW; RECORD EMPLOYED

7.3% Lacked Work in May

By EILEEN SHANAHAN Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 4—The unemployment rate went down to 7.3 percent in May after holding steady at 7.5 percent for the two preceding months, the Labor Department reported today. The May rate was the lowest for any month since December 1974.

The total number of persons holding jobs also continued to increase strongly, rising by 300,000 to a record 87.7 million.

The big decrease in unemployment was among adult women, whose jobless rate dropped in May by five-tenths of 1 percent to 6.8 percent, while the unemployment rate for adult men has remained essentially unchanged at 5.6 percent for the last three months.

The relatively greater improvement in the job picture for women reflects the fact that they work largely in service industries, where job opportunities have grown almost without interruption, whereas employment in manufacturing and construction, where men are concentrated, is still far below prerecession levels.

The failure of employment opportunities for men to expand was noted by George Meany, president of the A.F.L.-C.I.O., in a comment on the jobless figures.

Mr. Meany said that "the nation must not be misled into believing that the economy is in good shape."

As the labor federation and some other organizations, such as the Urban League, calculate unemployment, the "true rate" is 10.1 percent. These groups count as unemployed those persons who want jobs but have stopped searching for them because they believe none are available, and also count, as half an unemployed person, everyone who wants to work full time but can find only part-time work. The official figures do not include either group.

By this measure, there were 9.6 million people without work in May compared with the official Labor Department figure

Merrill Lynch Will Pay $1.9 Million in Bias Suits

WASHINGTON, June 4—Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith agreed today to settle two antidiscrimination suits brought against it by paying $1.9 million to individuals it had wrongfully failed to hire or promote and by adopting a $1.3 million, five-year plan of affirmative action to employ more women and minority-group members.

The settlements were filed today in United States District Court in Pittsburgh and announced simultaneously here by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

The commission itself had brought one of the suits, charging Merrill Lynch, the nation's largest brokerage concern, with following a "pattern and practice" of discrimination in its recruitment, hiring, job assignment, promotion, testing and maternity leave policies. The other suit was filed by Helen B. O'Bannon, now a member of the Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission, who charged Merrill Lynch with unlawfully refusing her a job as an account executive, the highest-paid category of securities salesperson. Mrs. O'Bannon will receive a cash payment of $10,000, under the settlement, and her lawyer will receive fees and expenses totaling more than $162,000.

Women and minorities who believe that they were wrongfully denied jobs or promotions by Merrill Lynch at any time since June 27, 1973, must apply for their share of the pool of back pay.

Merrill Lynch also agreed to

Distracted Air in House

By RICHARD L. MADDEN Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 4—Talk about the Presidential primaries has diminished. The debate on legislation each day seems more listless than usual.

The House of Representatives, which normally thrives on talk and gossip, is uncomfortably distracted these days by gossip about itself, worried about how the voters are reacting back home, and trying—not always successfully—to find a lighter side to the gloom.

Representatives have been exchanging unprintable innuendos and barracks jokes on

Berlinguer Link Stirs Interest in Sardinia and Greater Communist

By ALVIN SHUSTER
Special to The New York Times

SASSARI, Sardinia, June 2 —The walking and the talking and the sitting in the Piazza d'Italia begin shortly after 7 every evening, when mothers push strollers, the old gather to dis-

The Talk cuss years gone by and the young, many in the uniform of white jeans, meet to map strategy for the night ahead.

They move ritualistically across the square, stop at the Golden Rooster for ice cream or coffee, perch on the low walls of the City Hall and generally spend their time looking to see who else is around. It is the end of the day, and these are moments of relative tranquility before the square empties and the people go home for dinner and liberal doses of Sardinian wine.

This island and this city have changed over the years, but this evening tradition has not. In the past some famous names in Italian politics have joined in it here, men such as the late Antonio Segni, the former President of Italy, and Enrico Berlinguer, now the leader of the Communist Party.

It is the Berlinguer connection, of course, that has revived interest in Sassari, where the party leader was born 54 years ago, the son of a prosperous family descended from Spanish nobility. When he became the Communist chief in 1972, the party decided that perhaps it was time to intensify efforts to end the long political domination of the city and the island by the Christian Democrats.

Double Their Vote
The Communists have had some success. In five years they doubled their vote in this city of 110,000 from 13 percent to more than 26 percent. Last year they managed to oust the Christian Democrats from City Hall for the first time since World War II and helped install a Socialist as mayor.

"The Christian Democrats are still the biggest single party," said 20-year-old Antonietta Colombini, who works in a flower shop and meets her friends every night in the square. "People say they want things to improve, but they still go on voting for the Christian Democrats. I'll vote Communist in the elections this month because I want to see what happens. I want to give change a chance."

"It is time for greater change," said Antonio Secchi, a 40-year-old factory worker, who was sitting alone. "More has to be done for this island. The young people are leaving for Turin when there should be work here, and they don't want to go. We don't have enough technicians now, and when something goes wrong we have to call in Americans or Germans because our own are in northern Italy."

The island, which is the second largest in the Mediterranean after Sicily but which has only 1.5 million people, has long been an exporter of talent. Sardinians call mainland Italy "the continent," and they say that they first sent it soldiers, then wheat, then workers and received very little in return.

They have taken all this in their easy-going manner and have not joined in any appeals for independence. But they now seem eager to move faster toward change and development, to revive their stagnating agriculture, to broaden their industry and to try to end their status on the fringes of Italian life.

In political terms, the effort may well take the shape of more votes for the Communists in the elections June 20. And the Christian Democrats, who still control the regional government, are having problems all over the island, especially here in Berlinguer country.

"The fact that Berlinguer comes from Sassari is not really a handicap for us," said Pietro Montessori, the leader of the local Christian Democrats. "Sassari has a heritage of people who have become famous, Berlinguer's brother, Giovanni, is a deputy from here, but Enrico is distant and is running on the continent. Besides, the elections will be decided on broad issues, such as freedom and liberty as opposed to the risks of Communism."

Accordingly, as elsewhere in Italy, the Christian Democrats are stoking up the "fear" issue in hopes of holding back the Communists.

One of their posters, for example, says: "How much do you want to gamble to discover whether the Communist Party is sincere?" Moreover, the Christian Democrats have their own local boy who made good, and they bring up his name at every opportunity. He is Francesco Cossiga, the Minister of the Interior, one of the Christian Democrats' new faces and a distant cousin of Mr. Berlinguer.

There is also some Christian Democratic optimism because of what happened the other day to the Madonna delle Grazie. It seems that when Sassari avoided bombardment in World War II the residents decided to consecrate the city to the Madonna and to hold a celebration and a procession each year.

A few days ago, just before the festivities, a group said to be made up of left-wing extremists went into the church and sprayed paint on the church's altar. Last Sunday, when the celebration was held, the crowd was the largest in years.

Disavowed by Communists
"People may not be as religious here as they once were," said a local businessman. "They may not listen closely to the church's warnings against voting Communist. But there is no doubt that the left-wing attack, though disowned by the Communist Party, probably means 15,000 more votes for the Christian Democrats."

The party's candidates are wandering in and out of Sassari, often shuttling between here and other parts of the island, including the capital of Cagliari and the Costa Smeralda, which was developed into a resort area by the Aga Khan. The other night here, one Christian Democratic member of Parliament, Carlo Molé, concluded a dinner rally by joining in folk songs dealing with the delights of eggplants and the fate of shepherds in the hills during the winter.

As for the Communists, they are concentrating primarily on arguing for government problems, in the case of Sardinia, the benefits has come to last decade the worker chemical factories parties.

4 Injured in Clash of Italian Extremists

Special to The New York Times
ROME, June 4—Four persons were wounded tonight when right-wing and left-wing groups battled each other and the police in the Piazza Venezia in downtown Rome.

The incident came amid a rising wave of political violence that has marked this electoral campaign. Exactly a week ago, a young Communist, Luigi di Rosa, was shot dead in a town near Rome by persons believed to be neo-Fascists.

Tonight's clash occurred between members of the neo-Fascist Italian Social Movement-National Right Wing who were holding a pre-electoral rally in the nearby Piazza Santissimi Apostoli, and about a hundred left-wing extremists in the Piazza Venezia.

The battle began during the evening rush hour, under a light rain, when streets were crowded with throngs of Romans hurrying along sidewalks, waiting at bus stops and stalled in traffic jams. Suddenly, scores of police and carabinieri in full riot gear charged into the piazza. They were preceded by the infuriated extremists, who retreated before the tear-gas attack to a corner of the square and responded to the police barrage by hurling Molotov cocktails.

Terrified passers-by raced for cover at the sounds of the shots.

The police said tonight that the neo-Fascist rally had just broken up because of the rain, when some departing rightists who had reached the Piazza Venezia came face to face with the left-wing extremists. The two groups exchanged insults and then blows, and then the pistol shots were fired against the neo-Fascists, the police added.

Many onlookers—and some policemen—witnessed the impression that tonight's violence was a retaliation for the killing of di Rosa in Sezze Romano, a small town near the industrial city of Latina, 50 miles south of the capital.

The youth was shot in "the wake of clashes between Communists and neo-Fascists during a political rally held by Sandro Saccucci, a Member of Parliament for the neo-Fascist Party.

The Sezze killing caused an outcry throughout Italy because Mr. Saccucci, at one point, fired a gun into the air from his place on the podium. It is thought that this may have started off the shooting—allegedly by other neo-Fascists—that led to the death of Mr. di Rosa.

Mr. Saccucci, who disappeared after the Sezze meeting, was turned back by Italian border police Wednesday as he attempted to enter Switzerland. His whereabouts are now unknown.

Yesterday, a marshal of the paramilitary carabinieri force and an agent of the Italian espionage service, Francesco Trocchia, was arrested on charges of negligence in the carrying out of his office, aiding and abetting a crime and false witness.

Capital Gains Tax Revives Era of Debate in Paris

By JAMES F. CLARITY
Special to The New York Times

PARIS, June 4 — A drum rolled, soldiers of the Republican Guard in dress blues soaped themselves and their rifles to attention, and at precisely 3 P.M. two officers with raised sabers escorted the presiding officer of the French National Assembly into the parliamentary chamber for the third day of the capital gains tax battle—a pocketbook issue that is arousing more personal concern in France than Lebanon, nuclear proliferation and many other problems combined.

Inside the chamber of the 18th-century building still called the Palais Bourbon, the members were ready to cheer, or at least mutter, the proposed tax, which is the centerpiece of President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing's announced efforts to reform some aspect of French society.

Like Old Times
Since Tuesday, dozens of the 490 elected deputies have been debating legislation—which is already far narrower than the capital gains tax in the United States—as if their seats depended on it, which they might.

The legislation—which would impose taxes on stock transactions but not, for example, on gold sales—has driven the Assembly beyond the usual right-versus-left polemics to a level of maliciously animated debate it has not experienced for months, perhaps years. It recalls for some politicians the parliament of the Fourth Republic, which expired in 1958 with a reputation for a maximum of heated, confused talk and relatively little action.

While de Gaulle, who created the present Fifth Republic, used to talk with disdain about the "nostalgia" some Frenchmen had for the Fourth, deputies of both the right and left are enjoying the battle, which is expected to end in the passage of a vastly diluted capital gains tax law or its postponement or defeat. The debate also illustrates how the deputies, when in Paris, earn their annual salaries of $24,000, plus railroad passes and allotments for secretarial help. (The 74 Communist deputies contribute their salaries to the party.)

Man Under Fire
The tax fight has generally aligned the Communists and the Socialists on the left side of the chamber with many Gaullists, who sit on the right, as viewed from the Speaker's rostrum. In the middle are the bill's reluctant defenders, the Independent Republicans of President Giscard d'Estaing's own party.

Sitting in the first row of velvet seats, reserved for Cabinet members charged with defending their projects, is the Minister of the Economy and Finance, Jean-Pierre Fourcade, Mr. Fourcade, who has a steel-grey crew cut, and hornrimmed glasses, is considered Public Enemy No. 1 by deputies and their constituents who fear or claim that the proposed tax will rob the poor and middle class, while letting the rich escape.

The Communists have denounced the bill as Giscardian trickery to siphon off the savings of the little man. The Giscardists are committed to supporting it; the Gaullists are divided.

Today's first speaker, Maurice Plantier, Gaullist, did not pause to sip the glass of water placed at his side on a silver tray (changed with each speaker), as he defended the bill. He suggested, turning to his left, that if the Communists ever came to power in France, they would have to impose more taxes themselves, the remark earning him a burst of hoots and howls from the leftist members.

The presiding officer, François le Douarec, a Gaullist deputy, tapped a wooden stick on his desk for order. Mr. Plantier concluded by saying he would vote for the bill, hoping it would be amended. There are already some 800 amendments to the legislation pending.

As a few deputies read afternoon newspapers, and official messengers wearing traditional stiff white shirts, bow ties and black tailcoats moved about the chamber, another Gaullist, Hector Rolland, declared: "Honest people risk being scalped. The chateau will escape the tax, but not the little secondary residence."

The "secondary residence," which is excluded from coverage in the bill, has been used, nevertheless, by some politicians to conjure up images of poor old widows being forced to pay heavy taxes when they sell their tiny cottages in the woods.

After 15 minutes of talk, Mr. Rolland, who drew laughs from both sides of the house with some of his remarks, paused and said of his own speech, "Not bad, eh?"

Mr. Fourcade took the rostrum, asserting that contrary to what some members felt, he was not a "short-sighted technocrat who has betrayed the President of the republic." The only applause Mr. Fourcade gained from the left or the Gaullists came when he announced that the Government would not present its full argument on the bill until next week, meaning many of the deputies could leave Paris early for a four-day weekend.

Leftists Appeal Talks With Syrians

Special to The New York Times

June 4—[their late teens or 20's—did not seem to expect trouble. Inside the leftist-held zone, which runs from Mra'at through Aleith to the crossroads of Khalde, south of the Beirut airport, there was a notable absence of heavy weaponry or even gunmen. Checkpoints were relaxed.

At one point, two gunmen stopped a Syrian taxi driver in his tattered yellow Chevrolet. One said earnestly in Arabic, "The Syrian and Lebanese people are one, but your Government is no good."

At Khalde, where Syrian and Syrian-run guerrillas of As Sa'qa have been in position for almost three months, red, white and black flags of the Syrian Baath Party were prominently displayed.

Syrian or Syrian-run forces also control the Beirut airport, and for the second day, Beirut newspapers sent to the airport were reported to have been seized and burned.

Shortly after 5 P.M., a jet streaked over Beirut in what appeared to be part of a Syrian-orchestrated campaign of psychological warfare. Yesterday, jets variously identified as MIG's or Hawker Hunters also flew over the capital.

Some Electricity Restored

Beirut was without electricity for the third day in a row. But in the late afternoon, current was temporarily restored in some quarters of the city.

In much of the city, the whir of generators in hospitals, hotels and some newspaper offices enabled some activity to continue at a reduced level.

Fuad Hzi, the head of the electric power system, attributed the blackout of the capital to an inability to move fuel from the one functioning refinery at Zahrani, south of Sidra to a generator in the Christian bastion north of Beirut.

But as the first long-term blackout in the civil war coincided with the Syrian penetration into Lebanon, there was some suspicion that pro-Syrian elements had sabotaged the system to aggravate the mood of crisis.

Beirut now is a largely lifeless city, running down like an old watch, maintaining a feeble subsistence level of commerce and human activity.

The Syrian incursion seems to have jolted the political leadership to grope for what is being called a "Lebanese solution" to the civil war.

"It's too late," said one despairing Lebanese, who like many has been revolted by the mercurial behavior of the country's political leaders. "Why didn't they think of it sooner?"

At a reception at the United Nations, King Juan Carlos I talks with the daughter of a member of the Spanish delegation. Queen Sofia stands behind him.

King Vows Stable Era For Spain

King Juan Carlos I of Spain arrived in New York today, stressing that he expected development in his country to result in an orderly and stable framework.

Speaking publicly at a big dinner and privately to groups of businessmen and other prominent New Yorkers, the King sought to convey the message to this selected audience that political changes now going on in Spain would not get out of hand.

"We are determined to maintain order and stability, political and social, so that capital, management and labor may work together harmoniously for the good of the whole society," he told 1,800 guests at a banquet at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, sponsored jointly by the Spain-United States Chamber of Commerce and the Spanish Institute.

Earlier, at a private meeting with a group of businessmen with interests in Spain, the King answered questions about labor troubles and the strength of the Communist Party. Participants would not disclose just what he said, other than to say that he spoke in general terms that they found reassuring.

The King also addressed members of the Council of Foreign Relations.

In today's portion of his two-day visit, he stayed mostly indoors. Queen Sofia, on the other hand, drove uptown to visit the Hispanic Museum.

The King and Queen arrived from Washington shortly before noon. They visited the United Nations where they had lunch with Secretary General Kurt Waldheim and other members of the Secretariat. The King presented Mr. Waldheim with a bust of an early Spanish writer on international law, Father Francisco de Vitoria.

The King then returned to the Waldorf-Astoria for his meetings. As he was addressing the groups, about a hundred pickets representing different groups, including Veterans of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade, demonstrated across the street on Park Avenue. They displayed signs calling for freedom for Catalonia, Galicia and the Basque country, and chanted slogans such as "Spanish freedom yes, Juan Carlos no!"

Tomorrow the monarchs' program will be more open. Among other things they will inaugurate a new Spanish tourist center in midtown Manhattan and drive to Brooklyn to lay a wreath commemorating Spaniards who were taken prisoner by the British during the American Revolution and died while in captivity.

Six Arab Nations Back Talks on Lebanon

Special to The New York Times
CAIRO, June 4—Six Arab countries have agreed to attend an emergency meeting of foreign ministers of the Arab League members to discuss the Syrian military intervention in Lebanon, a league spokesman said today.

At least five more of the 20 members must agree before the meeting can be held. If there is a meeting, Egypt will press for the joint Arab peacekeeping force it suggested earlier in the year, a Foreign Ministry source said.

Morocco, Yemen, Southern Yemen and Abu Dhabi have joined Egypt and Iraq in agreeing to the meeting, first requested by the Palestine Liberation Organization, the spokesman said.

Decisive to the meeting will be the response of Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, which have been trying to arrange a reconciliation between Egypt and Syria in their feud over the Sinai disengagement agreement that Egypt signed last fall with Israel.

The Foreign Ministers of Saudi Arabia and Kuwait were in Cairo this week when Syrian troops moved into Lebanon. Foreign Ministry sources said the Syrian move had completely overshadowed the reconciliation attempt.

Also decisive to the meeting will be the response of Lebanon, Egyptians said, though it is unclear who in the splintered Lebanese Government would be empowered to speak for the country.

The Palestine Liberation Organization does not have full voting privileges in the Arab League and therefore is not counted as one of the 11 needed to authorize the meeting.

After a day's hesitation, Egypt endorsed the meeting and strongly criticized the Syrian intervention. Diplomats here point out that the statement was carefully worded, seldom mentioning Syria by name, to avoid damaging whatever slim chance there might be of persuading Syria to attend the conference.

The call for the meeting was the only move Egypt could make, diplomats here say, since President Anwar el-Sadat has ruled out any direct intervention in the situation.

It also was in line with Egypt's reconciliation with the Palestinians, who had been bitterly critical of the Sinai agreement but then turned to Egypt for help against the Syrians.

When Egypt first proposed the joint Arab peacekeeping force several months ago, there was little or no enthusiasm among other Arabs.

But at that time armed Syrian forces were not confronting armed Palestinians and Lebanese in Lebanon's Bekaa Valley as they are now, diplomatic sources remarked.

Officials in the Egyptian Foreign Ministry are convinced that the Syrian move into Lebanon had the full blessing of the United States. They complain that a Syrian attack on the moderate Palestinian forces can only benefit the radical factions of the guerrilla movement.

Even if 11 Arab countries do agree to a meeting, more than this will be required to compel Syria to withdraw from Lebanon, Egyptian sources believe.

Kosygin and Syrians Agree on Lebanon

Special to The New York Times
BEIRUT, Lebanon, June 4—Syria and the Soviet Union declared in a communiqué today that they were determined to pursue their efforts for ending the bloodshed in Lebanon and preserving the country's sovereignty, independence and territorial unity.

The communiqué, broadcast by Damascus radio, was issued at the end of a four-day visit to Syria by the Soviet Prime Minister, Alexsei N. Kosygin, who had earlier visited Iraq.

"Imperialists" Accused

Mr. Kosygin returned to Moscow after having said at the Damascus airport that his talks with President Hafez al-Assad and Prime Minister Mahmoud al-Ayubi had deepened the relations and cooperation between the two countries.

Western diplomatic sources believe the reference to Lebanon is a point in favor of the Syrian intervention, which the Russians had opposed in the past. Moscow-oriented Arab Communists have been waging a vehement campaign against the Syrian action.

Kosygin and Syrians Agree on Lebanon

The communiqué, however, upheld the Soviet view that the 14-month crisis in Lebanon was the making of "imperialist powers."

Diplomatic sources here said the emphasis on the communiqué on continuation of Soviet assistance to "strengthen Syria's defense ability" was evidence Moscow was not using its military aid as a means of pressure on Damascus to withdraw its forces from Lebanon.

The declaration is believed to be a substitute for an outright treaty of friendship between Moscow and Damascus. Syria, unlike Iraq, is still reluctant to conclude such a treaty.

President Anwar el-Sadat of Egypt abrogated his country's 1971 treaty with the Soviet Union. The Soviet-Iraq treaty was concluded in 1972 and runs for 15 years.

On the Middle East, the statement reiterated the contention of both countries that Israel was responsible for the continuation of the "explosive situation" in the area. It condemned what it described as Israeli repressive measures against Arabs in occupied areas.

Complete Israeli withdrawal from the Arab lands occupied in the 1967 war and re-establishment of the national rights of the Palestinians, "including their right to create their own independent entity," provide the only solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict, the communiqué said.

The Geneva conference on the Middle East is a good framework for seeking such a settlement, it added.

Some analysts here see this point as a success for Moscow's Middle East policy. They recalled that Damascus in recent months had been downgrading the Geneva conference as a forum for settling the Arab-Israeli dispute.

In an apparent allusion to Egypt's second-stage Sinai disengagement agreement with Israel last September, the communiqué condemned what it called "partial and unilateral solutions" to the Middle East problem.

Chilean Assails 'Neutrality' at O.A.S. Conference

By JUAN DE ONIS
Special to The New York Times

SANTIAGO, Chile, June 4—President Augusto Pinochet, Chile's military ruler, called on Latin America today to stand cohesively with the United States in an "ideological war" against Communism.

Citing the "armed expansionism" of what he termed Soviet imperialism, General Pinochet said at a meeting of hemisphere foreign ministers here that "there is no room for comfortable neutrality" in the Americas, and he scoffed at "peaceful coexistence."

President Pinochet spoke at the opening session of the ministerial conference of the Organization of American States. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger is expected to join the conference on Monday.

Cuba, which was excluded from the regional organization in 1962, and Mexico, which does not maintain diplomatic relations with the Pinochet Government, were not represented at the meeting.

Rights Are Touched Upon

The 60-year-old Chilean ruler, wearing his blue-gray general's uniform and flanked by an aide, accused Cuba and Mexico of violating the principle of non-intervention in the internal affairs of another American country. With karate-style chops of his right arm for emphasis, General Pinochet, cheered by an audience of invited Chilean guests, defended his Government's ideology and international attitude.

Although Mr. Kissinger was not yet here, the Pinochet speech addressed some of the major problems, including charges of human-rights violations in Chile, that are expected to be discussed during the three-day Kissinger visit.

General Pinochet said Chile favored creating a legal institution in the O.A.S. with regional jurisdiction "to hear and pronounce judgment on denunciations of grave violations of human rights."

But he said Chile would like such a body—apparently a different one from the Commission on Human Rights that has existed since 1959—to have its "right of action" and its access to any country "precisely defined."

Chile has resisted investigation by the Human Rights Commission of the United Nations and does not agree with a report prepared by the organization's Human Rights Commission that has been circulated among delegations here.

General Pinochet and his Finance Minister, Jorge Cauas, were told by Secretary of the Treasury William E. Simon during his visit here last month that Chile's record on human rights and political restrictions posed a serious obstacle to United States financial aid.

Releases and New Detentions

Since the 1973 military overthrow of the elected government of President Salvador Allende Gossens, thousands of people have been arrested, held in jails without court order and, in many cases, tortured during investigation of opposition activities. Those who have disappeared after being arrested and are presumed dead, now number several hundred, according to lawyers working with the Roman Catholic Church here.

During and after Mr. Simon's visit, Chilean security authorities released 305 political prisoners and may release more people held without charges before the end of this meeting. But in the last few weeks, legal aid sources said that several hundred, most of them reportedly members of the Communist Party, have been detained.

Interior Ministry officials would say only that "normal precautions" were taken to avoid incidents during the O.A.S. meeting, which ends June 18.

Chilean military authorities do not accept the designation of "political prisoners" for more than 3,500 people who have been convicted by military courts or are waiting trial for crimes allegedly committed during the Allende tenure. One of these is Luis Corvalán, Secretary General of the Communist Party.

General Pinochet drew prolonged applause from a partisan audience of Government officials, their wives and other invited guests when he attacked "international Communism" and the "proliferation of terrorism" by leftist extremists.

General Pinochet expressed opposition to organization of economic groups in Latin America outside the O.A.S. framework—groups that are independent of the United States. This was directed at the Latin American Economic System, a new regional grouping proposed by Mexico, Venezuela and Colombia, with the participation of Cuba, but not of the United States.

Apparently to avoid having to reply to General Pinochet, the Colombian Foreign Minister, Inadalecio Lívano Aguirre, president of the last meeting of foreign ministers, put off his arrival here until tomorrow.

The reply, in the name of the delegation, was made by Uruguay's Foreign Minister, Juan José Blanco, who represents another rightist military government.

The ideological and political differences between O.A.S. members were not acknowledged in a speech by Alejandro Orfila, the Argentine Secretary General of the organization, but he did say that the organization had lost its relevance where Latin America's major problems—economic—were concerned.

"This, Mr. Orfila said, was due to the decline of United States commitments since the Alliance for Progress program, promulgated by President John F. Kennedy for cooperation in economic and social development, and measures taken by Congress against the oil-exporting countries of Latin America—Venezuela and Ecuador—in the last Foreign Trade Act.

The conference has an agenda of 40 items, including the Panama Canal, Aquilino Boyd, Panama's Foreign Minister, said at a news conference that he was hopeful that the text of a new canal treaty with the United States would be "ready in 12 months."

Mr. Boyd attacked Ronald Reagan as a "reactionary, racist extremist" for his opposition to a new canal treaty and statements supporting United States military intervention in African disputes.

O.A.S.: Solidarity the Key

Purpose—The Organization of American States was founded in Bogotá, Colombia, in 1948, to foster mutual understanding and cooperation among the nations of the Western Hemisphere. Other aims were achievement of peace and justice, promotion of hemispheric solidarity and the defense of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence of member states.

Organization—The O.A.S., which is based in Washington, is composed of a General Assembly, a Permanent Council composed of one representative of each member state with the rank of ambassador, a general secretariat and several specialized agencies and commissions. Policy is set by the General Assembly, which meets once a year.

Members—Argentina, Barbados, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Trinidad and Tobago, the United States, Uruguay and Venezuela. Cuba, formerly a member nation, was excluded in 1962 and Canada has declined membership because of its involvement in the Commonwealth.

History—On April 14, 1890, the International Union of American Republics was formed in Washington. This later became the Pan American Union, pledged to fostering mutual understanding and cooperation among the nations of the Western Hemisphere. Successive inter-American conferences broadened the scope of the Union until April 30, 1948, when the Ninth International Conference of American States, in Bogotá, adopted the Charter of the Organization of American States.

Activities—The O.A.S. has administered technical-assistance programs in agriculture, education, health and sanitation and public administration. In the political field, it has been fairly effective as a keeper of peace. The 1948-49 border war between Costa Rica and Nicaragua was brought to an amicable close by an O.A.S. peace committee. A similar outbreak between Nicaragua and Honduras in 1957 was also ended through the efforts of the organization.

I.L.O. Conference Rebuffs U.S. In Voting to Admit Palestinians

accordance with due process and that our delegation stood united in seeing the situation in the same way."

The United States also took comfort in the fact that it had the continued support of Britain, France, Italy and West Germany, which had also voted in favor of excluding the P.L.O. in the original count.

"We are not walking out," Mr. Horowitz said after a telephone conversation with officials in the State and Labor Departments in Washington.

"We are pleased that the industrialized democracies stand with us in our desire not to see the I.L.O. politicized. At the same time, because the P.L.O. issue is so much a political one, we will simply not be present when ever the P.L.O. participates."

The Arabs had made it clear that they would not accept a rebuff to their position even if the governing body excluded the Palestinians. Fear by I.L.O. executives that the Arabs would boycott the conference was an important factor in the decision to arrange a new vote.

The objective of the conference sponsors is to establish consensus on minimum needs for assuring a decent life to all people and then to evolve a strategy for bringing workers and their families in even the poorest countries up to that level by the year 2000.

Argument will come over how much of the lifting of economic standards and the creation of new jobs should come through economic growth and how much through a redistribution of wealth from the richer countries to the poorer ones. Background papers prepared for the conference by the I.L.O. staff lean heavily on World Bank studies questioning the effectiveness of growth-oriented development strategies as relievers of global poverty.

Economic advisers to the United States delegation have criticized these studies as over-emphasizing collectivization of farm land and underemphasizing entrepreneurial activity.

mission of the Palestinians might cause the United States to invoke immediately the formal notice to quit the I.L.O. in November, 1977, unless it "depoliticizes" its activities.

The governing body's reversal came by a vote of 31 to 23, with one member abstaining after the executive group had rejected a contention by the American delegation that last Saturday's vote was not subject to review under the organization's rules. The initial vote had been 24 to 23 against the P.L.O.

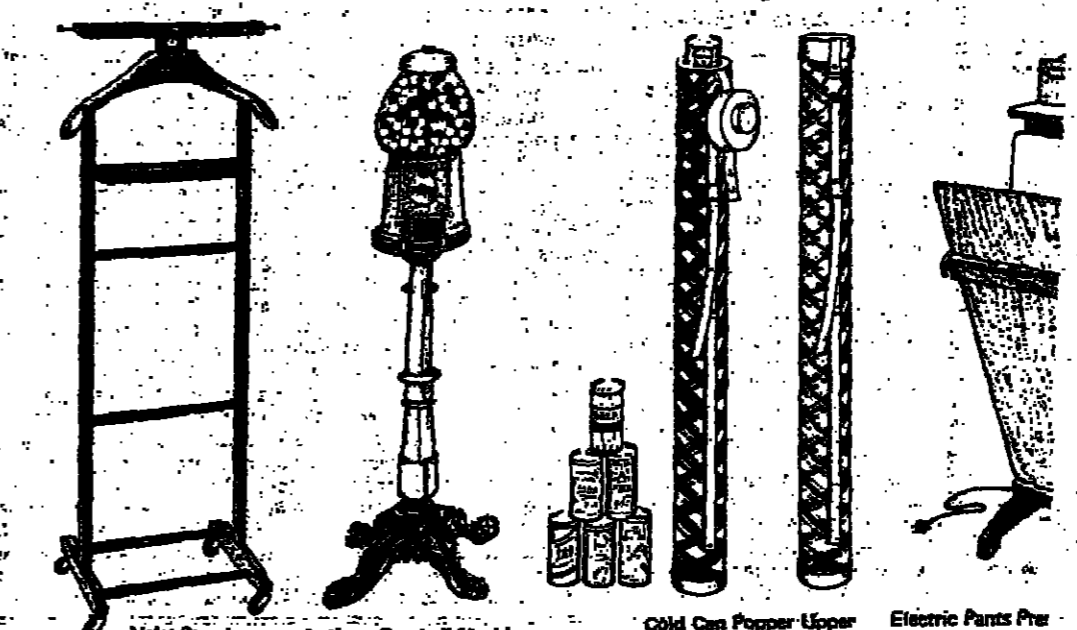

The shift reflected a vigorous drive by the Arabs and their backers to round up members of the executive board who had been absent the first time. Representatives of four African nations had been among the absentees. Tonight all of the governing body's members were on hand, except for the empty chair China refuses to fill.

Abdul-Muhsin Abu Mizer, a member of the P.L.O. executive committee, hailed the seating of his organization as "a decisive victory for all the liberation movements of Asia and Africa" since the bylaws of the I.L.O. were amended to give every such organization the right to participate without vote in any meeting under the world body's auspices.

The P.L.O. statement was characterized by Daniel L. Horowitz, the chief government representative for the United States, as proof of the correctness of Washington's position that the Palestinians did not belong in the employment conference.

Essentially, admission of the P.L.O. was a political issue which never should have been brought into an organization that has important technical functions to perform," Mr. Horowitz said. "However, the important thing for us was that the problem was handled in

ETHIOPIA COUNCIL HOEDS UP MARCH

Rulers Apparently Still Want to Negotiate With Rebels

AKSUM, Ethiopia, June 4 (AP)—Ethiopia's ruling military council has halted the advance of a peasant army outside the boundaries of rebellious Eritrea, apparently pending a fast-minute attempt at talks with rebel leaders.

A high-level delegation, which explained the council's quest for a negotiated solution to President Gaafar al-Nimeiry in the neighboring Sudan last weekend, has left Addis Ababa for Aden on a similar mission to Ethiopia's neighbors across the Red Sea.

Officials in this town 100 miles south of the Eritrean capital of Asmara say more than 4,000 armed peasant "volunteers" recruited to speed an "invading enemy" have been held up here for two weeks.

Informed sources here and elsewhere in the border area say some 15,000 mobilized peasants are waiting at points around the Eritrean border, including the Sudanese border town of Humera.

Sources in Adigrat, 70 miles east of here, said Eritrean separatist guerrillas killed at least 200 persons in an attack on an encampment of 1,000 lightly armed peasants north of the town a week ago. They said that after the attack hundreds of peasants set off on foot for their homes in two provinces of northeast Ethiopia.

The peasant mobilization against the Eritrean Liberation Front began eight weeks ago. Eritrea, a former Italian colony, is Ethiopia's northernmost province and is strategically situated on the Red Sea. It has been the scene of guerrilla warfare ever since it was reunified with Ethiopia in 1952.

9 Mexico City Policemen Killed In Terrorist Attack at Roll Call

MEXICO CITY, June 4 (AP)—Submachine-gun fire from two speeding cars killed six policemen and wounded six others lined up for roll-call this morning in the Mexico City suburb of Ciudad Azteca, the police said.

A police spokesman said those riding in the cars threw out leaflets bearing the name of the September 23d Communist League, a leftist terrorist organization that took the responsibility for the kidnapping last week of the daughter of the Belgian ambassador to Mexico. She was released Saturday night after the payment of a $408,000 ransom.

After the Ciudad Azteca attack, roadblocks were set up on all highways leading into Mexico City and helicopters patrolled strategic points in the capital from the air.

The police spokesman said the attack came at 8:10 A.M. at a small police station at Ciudad Azteca, in the northeastern section of Mexico City.

The spokesman quoted witnesses as saying the attackers fired from two speeding cars that had no license plates and quickly vanished in Mexico City's morning rush-hour traffic.

The September 23d Communist League is the most active of half a dozen leftist underground groups in Mexico. It takes its name from a terrorist attack on an army barracks in the northern state of Chihuahua on Sept. 23, 1966.

The league is said to have an active membership of 40 to 60 persons in their early 20's, including a dozen women, and an overall membership of 500 to 600.

The Belgian Ambassador's daughter, 16-year-old Nadine Chaval, was kidnapped on her way to school May 28 and released unharmed.

to Be Effective Jan. 1

OTTAWA, June 4 (AP)—Canada will unilaterally extend its fishing jurisdiction to 200 miles offshore later this year to take effect by next Jan. 1, Foreign Secretary Allan MacEachen said today.

Canada has already passed a law that would make a 200-mile limit legal 60 days after it is proclaimed.

The United States will extend its fishing limit from 12 to 200 miles offshore by next March 1 unless the United Nations Law of the Sea Conference comes up with an international fisheries pact before then. The conference has been working for four years to reach international agreement on control of resources in offshore waters and the high seas.

Mr. MacEachen's announcement of Canada's intentions regarding fishing jurisdiction followed the signing of a fisheries treaty with the Soviet Union last month. Under the treaty the Soviet Union agreed to abide by quotas and regulations within the 200-mile zone in return for a fair share of fish exceeding that needed by Canadian fishermen.

Catch quotas are expected to be cut back sharply over a period of years after establishment of the 200-mile zone to allow overfished stocks, such as haddock, to recover.

46 Killed in Crash on Guam As Airliner Strikes Truck

AGANA, Guam, June 4 (AP)—All 45 persons aboard an Air Manila propeller jet and the driver of a truck with which the plane collided were killed today when the plane crashed and burst into flames after taking off from Guam International Airport.

The plane, a Lockheed Electra, came down in a field after taking off from a fueling stop. It was on a flight from Wake Island to Manila.

The craft struck a hill-bounced over a highway and hit a pickup truck, according to a witness.

The dead included the 33 passengers, Filipino contract workers returning home from Wake Island, according to George Miyachi, a Federal Aviation Administration spokesman in Honolulu, and the 12 crew members and the driver of the truck.

2 Exiled Opposition Leaders Seized on Return to Spain

MADRID, June 4 (UPI)—A judge ordered the arrest of two opposition politicians today who returned to Spain from exile following the death of Franco.

The Public Order Court ordered the arrest of Santiago Alvarez, a leading Communist, and of Rafael Calvo Serrer, a philosophy professor and former newspaper publisher, who returned only 24 hours earlier after almost five years in exile.

Mr. Calvo Serrer was held in Madrid's Carabanchel Prison pending a decision on whether he will be tried on a charge of standing the Franco government.

The 60-year-old liberal returned to Spain yesterday after almost five years in exile. He left Spain after the Government closed his newspaper, Madrid, in the fall of 1971.

Buddhists Plan Community in UTAH, Calif.

UKIAH, Calif., June 4 (AP)—A Buddhist-oriented settlement may double this city's population of 10,500. The San Francisco-based Sino-American Buddhist Association, which bought the Mendocino State Hospital grounds in East Ukiah's Talmage area three days ago, said it had immediate plans for a community of 10,000 followers of Buddha and "like-minded individuals."

South Africans Exultant Over Kissinger Meeting

By JOHN F. BURNS
Special to The New York Times

JOHANNESBURG, June 4—South Africa today hailed the coming meeting between Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and Prime Minister John Vorster as a major breakthrough for the Government after years of diplomatic isolation. But the enthusiasm was tempered by a sense of the difficulty that the two men are likely to have in finding common ground on the principal issues they are to discuss.

In Washington, the State Department said that a major goal of Secretary Kissinger's meeting with Prime Minister Vorster would be the coordination of views on how to avoid a race war in southern Africa. Page 6.

Official pronouncements in Cape Town, where Parliament is in session, were limited to a statement by the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Hilgard Muller, confirming that the meeting would take place this month. But privately officials were exultant over what they interpreted as a triumph for Mr. Vorster's "forward diplomacy."

The officials noted that with the exception of a brief visit here last year by James Callaghan, who was then Britain's Foreign Secretary, South Africa had no top-level contact with Western governments in several years. They attributed the United States' decision to abandon its policy of maintaining only low-level contact to Mr. Vorster's personal effort to demonstrate the value of including his Government in talks on the future of southern Africa.

Contacts With Black Capitals
The effort began in earnest two years ago, when Mr. Vorster surprised even his own Nationalist Party with a series of visits to black African capitals. He then joined with Zambia's President, Kenneth D. Kaunda, in an attempt to resolve the differences between the Rhodesian Prime Minister, Ian D. Smith, and his adversaries in the black-nationalist movement, the African National Congress.

Talks between Mr. Smith and the Rhodesian nationalists swiftly collapsed, but the South African Prime Minister had established himself as a major factor in the diplomatic effort to bring about a peaceful settlement in Rhodesia.

Apart from its own interest in promoting peace in the region, the Vorster Government sees involvement in the talks on Rhodesia as a means of overcoming the international ostracism to which it has been subjected because of its apartheid policy. Officials here believe that once Western leaders have met with Mr. Vorster about the problems of the region, there will be a growing recognition of the importance of maintaining contact.

This point was stressed by the news media in reaction to the announcement of the Kissinger-Vorster meeting. The state-owned South African Broadcasting Corporation said in a commentary that the meeting would be "in itself, apart from the outcome, a historic occasion."

"South African Victory"
The Johannesburg Star, which published a banner headline proclaiming the meeting a "South African victory," said that the talks were welcome in themselves, whatever difficulty the two men might have in resolving differences.

"It underlines the West's growing recognition that southern Africa's problems will never be solved without South Africa's help and good will," the newspaper said.

The differences between the two nations on Rhodesia are well defined. In a speech in the Zambian capital of Lusaka six weeks ago, Mr. Kissinger called for an economic boycott of Rhodesia and pledged United States assistance to nations hurt by the boycott. But Mr. Vorster has made it clear that South Africa, while prepared to apply political pressure on Mr. Smith, is not prepared to cut off his lifeline.

Since Mozambique closed its border with Rhodesia in March, the former British colony has relied for its supplies on two railway lines and a road that connect it to South Africa. Officials here made it clear that the Government here is not prepared to close them, but they have hinted recently that rail and port congestion in South Africa could be used as an excuse for denying Mr. Smith the volume of traffic that he needs.

Last month a senior official here was quoted in the press as saying that South Africa would under no circumstances intervene militarily to uphold the Smith Government. The official issued a qualifying statement later, saying that the South African position might change with conditions. But diplomats report having been told independently that the Government has determined not to involve itself in a guerrilla war.

A topic that presents possibilities for accommodation between Mr. Vorster and Mr. Kissinger is the "Yankee of South West Africa," the territory on the Atlantic coast of the subcontinent that South Africa continues to govern despite United Nations condemnation. The Vorster Government has said that it is ready to grant the territory independence and has supported a constitutional plan that is now being on in the territorial capital, Windhoek.

The United States has indicated that the talks be widened to include the South-West Africa People's Organization, which has been accepted by the United Nations as the spokesman for the territory's people.

On the question of apartheid and South Africa's internal political evolution, the positions of the two Governments are diametrically opposed.

While pledging his Government in an end to racial discrimination in South Africa, Mr. Vorster has made it clear that the Government remains committed to the essentials of apartheid.

Mr. Kissinger, on the other hand, called in London for an end to the "institutionalized separation of the races."

NEWLY DEVELOPED ISO-TENNIS BAND

IN ONLY ONE MINUTE A DAY, YOU CAN STRENGTHEN YOUR FOREARM

WITH THE R MORE P IN YOUR SWING & LESS STRAIN ON YOUR I

The muscle-strengthening feature of ISO-TENNIS BAND together with its use will give you that extra edge and help make you a winner.

The ISO-TENNIS BAND is based on the isometric principle. A prominent director of a leading university recently explained: "An isometric exercise in which you push or pull as hard as you can against an unyielding RESISTANCE held in contraction for only six seconds a day would increase in at the rate of about 5% per week." The ISO-TENNIS BAND provides this resistance, not enough to interfere with your play but enough to make the work harder, strengthening it in the process. The result is that you do more POWER IN YOUR SWING AND SERVE.

Every time your racket impacts a ball your elbow receives a shock. In with any inherent weakness, the accumulation of blows, as in a hard-soft set, causes damage to the muscle structure of the elbow. The result can be painful enough to keep the most enthusiastic tennis fan off the court for months. The ISO-TENNIS BAND is specifically designed to help prevent forearm pain by bringing into play isometric forces that put steady pressure on the forearm.

The ISO-TENNIS BAND is comprised of two bands of material. The inner band is made of heavy duty, extra firm resistance material that stretches to accommodate and brace your arm as you play. The outer band is attractive stretch terry cloth. It is adjustable so that you can wear it at the resistance level best for you.

U.S. Links Vorster Talks to Effort to Avoid Race War

by BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to the Times Staff Writer
WASHINGTON, June 4—The State Department said today that a major goal of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's coming meeting with Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa would be the coordination of views on how to avoid a race war in southern Africa. The Kissinger-Vorster meeting, set for June 23 and 24 in West Germany, was officially announced this morning by the department.

The department said that the two-day meeting was "exploratory" and that the two men would exchange analyses of southern African issues, such as the tension over white minority rule in Rhodesia, the timetable for granting independence to South Africa, and the apartheid policy of South Africa.

A high department official said that the session would be a follow-up to Mr. Kissinger's recent trip to several black-governed countries in southern Africa. He said that having heard the views of black Africans, Mr. Kissinger wanted to meet with Mr. Vorster because South Africa played an "essential" role in that part of Africa.

Mr. Kissinger's basic aim, the official said, was to avoid a race war in Southern Africa resulting from the increase in guerrilla activity by black nationals in Rhodesia and a possible spread of the conflict to South Africa.

The State Department seemed aware of the possible controversy over Mr. Kissinger's first such high-level meeting between the two countries since 1945. Because of its policy of apartheid, or legal separation of races, South Africa has been a major target of attack by liberals in this country.

Justifying the meeting with Mr. Vorster as necessary, the high official said that black African leaders had been informed in advance of Mr. Kissinger's plans to confer with Mr. Vorster and that the reaction had so far been favorable.

Moreover, the Congressional Black Caucus, while sharply critical of South Africa, had encouraged Mr. Kissinger to meet with Mr. Vorster to try to bring pressure on Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia to agree to majority rule by blacks in that country, which Washington regards as still under British sovereignty.

Representative Charles B. Rangel, Democrat of Manhattan and a leader of the Black Caucus, said today that Mr. Kissinger will address Vorster with concrete proposals for increased pressure on the Smith regime, then we welcome the high State Department official said that among the subjects that will be discussed will be South Africa's continued economic ties with Rhodesia through the railroad that serves as Rhodesia's main link to the sea, particularly since neighboring Mozambique closed its border to Rhodesia.

The South Africans, who formerly maintained close ties with Rhodesia, have increasingly been at odds with Salisbury since Mr. Vorster's mediation efforts last year collapsed. The South Africans have also warned that in a major guerrilla war inside Rhodesia they would not help the Government.

No Contact With Smith
The American official, while asserting that the meeting with Mr. Vorster was necessary, flatly ruled out any contact with Mr. Smith because of Washington's view that Rhodesia has an "illegal" government. Rhodesia unilaterally declared independence of Britain in 1965.

The State Department was extremely sensitive to suggestions that Mr. Kissinger was meeting with Mr. Vorster to deflect criticism from conservatives in his country who had criticized the announced policy of pressure on Rhodesia.

The high official—who declined to be publicly identified but who was not Mr. Kissinger —stressed that in the meeting with Mr. Vorster the Secretary would make known American criticism of apartheid.

Usually the State Department does not criticize the internal policies of a foreign government, but given the sensitivity of black Africans and black Americans to even the appearance of acceptance of South Africa's policy, the officials have decided to criticize apartheid before the meeting.

Hope to End Isolation
The South Africans have hoped to use the new American interest in southern Africa as a means for ending their own isolation in the West. The South Africans, for instance, have been unable to buy military equipment from the United States or to receive Government-backed loans from the Export-Import Bank.

Mr. Kissinger will be in Europe the week of June 30 for a meeting of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development in Paris and a speech in London. Mr. Vorster will be in West Germany to meet with his European ambassadors.

In another development, the White House announced that Mr. Ford would meet separately next week with two African leaders, President Seretse M. Khama of Botswana and President Geafar al-Nimeiry of the Sudan.

Legends of the Lochs: Quests by Saints and S

An artist's version of the Loch Ness Monster, based on photos made by previous Rines expeditions and on eyewitness accounts from sightings throughout the years.

By JOHN NOBLE WILFORD
Special to The New York Times

DRUMNADROICHT, Scotland, June 4—Something has made a legend of the deep and beautiful Loch Ness. Now members of a technologically advanced expedition are here testing new equipment in an effort to find that something, but they are aware that at the moment, their quest is one more episode in an oft-told tale of the highlands.

With luck, the Academy of Applied Science/New York Times Loch Ness Expedition's strategy of sonar and underwater photography could solve the mystery of the so-called Loch Ness Monster.

The hope is to get clear pictures of the phenomenon—be it animal, vegetable or otherwise—so that scientists can identify it once and for all.

The Scot's Achievement
The first known account of a monster supposedly inhabiting the waters of Loch Ness involves a Saint Columba who in 565, the story goes, commanded the beast to cease its vicious ways.

The "fierce monster" had slain one man "with a most savage bite" and was about to kill another when Columba, with missionary fervor to convert the heathen tribesmen, intervened, forming the sign of the cross, invoking the name of God and saying to the monster, "Think not to go further nor touch thou that man. Quick, go back!"

Terrified, the monster retreated and disappeared. And all who saw this, according to an early biography of Columba, "glorified God in the blessed man, greatly marveling."

The lore of the highlands is replete with monsters, "fabulous goblins" and water spirits known as kelpies, or water horses. They seem to have been everywhere, not only in Loch Ness.

A history in 1970 records "one monstrous fish, seen in Lochfyne." A map drawn in 1853 notes that Loch Lomond, near Glasgow, has "waves without wind, fish without fin and a floating island"—an observation that has been taken to describe the presence of some monster.

Boswell's Story
In his account of a tour of the Hebrides with Dr. Johnson in 1773, James Boswell related a story, told by his guide, of a sea horse from Loch na Mna that devoured a girl. Her father built a great fire, lured the monster with the smell of roasted sow and killed the creature with a red-hot spit. The guide, Boswell added, "did not laugh when he told me this story."

Sir Walter Scott wrote in a letter in 1815 that a "monster long reported to inhabit Caudledale Loch has of late been visible to sundry persons" and that it "was more like a cow or a horse." Another that Scott told of some highlanders, "resolved some highlanders, 'resolved' some highlanders into day," used two anchors as hooks and baited them with the carcass of a dog—but to no avail.

Best With Baleful Eye
On the Isle of Skye in 1870, a laird also had an idea about capturing a monster by dragging the loch "with a long pole. Children were let out of school, people came from miles around and there was more whisky than at a funeral." But when the net caught on a snag the crowd fled in fear, thinking the monster would rise out of the water in anger. All the laird managed to net were two pike.

Meanwhile, Loch Ness and its strange inhabitant were not entirely put of mind. In 1890 a diver said that he came across the beast and got a glance at one of its eyes—"it was small, gray and baleful."

Other accounts portrayed a more fearsome creature, in the vein of the following 19th-century story: "A noted demon once inhabited Loch Ness and was a source of terror to the neighborhood. Like other kelpies he was in the habit of browsing along the roadside, all bridled and saddled, as if waiting for someone to mount him. When any unwary traveler did so, the kelpie took to his heels and presently plunged into deep water with his victim on his back."

This tale seems to have been too much even for highland credulity. But in the 1930's Loch Ness and monsters became synonymous, a legend revived and magnified.

The construction of a new highway along the shore of the loch may have had something to do with the earliest reported sightings. Dynamite was used to blast the rocky slopes, the echoes rumbling through the glen and over the loch, boulders and timbers crashing into the dark waters.

Captured on Film
Could all the commotion have stirred up the creatures? Or was it the highway itself, which brought more travelers and a closer, unobstructed view of the loch?

At any rate, an excited interest in the Loch Ness Monster began in July 1933 when Mr. and Mrs. George Spicer were driving to London along the new road. They reported seeing a "loathsome sight" in the bracken, alongside the loch. A creature with a long neck thicker than an elephant's trunk, a small head, a thick body and four feet or flippers lurched across the road, carrying what seemed to be a young animal in its mouth. They estimated the creature to be 25 to 30 feet long.

Others claimed to have seen a larger animal with a small head thrashing about in the loch, making the water "froth and foam." When a correspondent of The Inverness Courier reported the sightings, the editor is said to have remarked: "We can't go on calling this thing a creature. If it is as big as you say it is, then it must be a monster."

And so it became known as the Loch Ness Monster. Though the public loved it, and monster-hunting became the rage, the scientific community scoffed at the whole idea.

E. G. Boulenger, director of the aquarium at the London Zoo, wrote in October 1933 that the Loch Ness Monster "is worthy of consideration if only because it presents a striking example of mass hallucination."

Many more sightings were reported in 1934, the most interesting of which was recorded on film by a London physician, Dr. Kenneth Wilson, motoring by the loch, spotted "the head of some strange animal" rising out of the water. One of the pictures he took with telephoto lens showed a long arched neck sticking out of the loch.

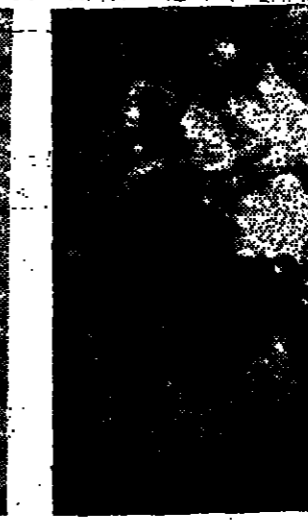

If the scientific skeptics remained unconvinced, the monster had at least one royal believer: The Duke of York, who became George VI, remarked in a speech that 3-year-old Princess Margaret had been looking through a fairy-story picture book when she came across a drawing of a dragon. She cried out, "Oh, look, mummy, what a darning little Loch Ness Monster!"

After a lapse in serious monster-watching during and immediately after World War II, the search at Loch Ness became increasingly popular. One source of encouragement was a photograph in 1955 that was assumed to show two humps of an otherwise submerged monster. Measurements indicated that the monster could be 50 feet long.

The New York Times
In 1934, Dr. Kenneth Wilson made this picture of "the head of some strange animal" rising from the waters of Loch Ness.

Underwater photo made in 1975 by a team headed by Dr. Robert E. Rines is said to show head with hornlike protuberances.

"An Animated Object"
The buffs flocked to the steep, often misty shore. Students from Oxford and Cambridge formed an expedition in 1960. The Loch Ness Investigation Bureau, Ltd., created in 1961, organized regular photographic searches. A far and wide as the Loch Ness Monster. Though the public loved it, and monster-hunting became the rage, the scientific community scoffed at the whole idea.

REBUKED OFFICIAL GETS PROMOTION

airs office, which had promised to make public all policy options taken by Mr. Clements, his not made available the Clements memorandum. Yesterday, William I. Greener, the Pentagon spokesman, said in response to inquiries that a reorganization involving Dr. Currie's office was still under study.

Mr. Greener declined to say what conclusion has been reached by Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld as a result of an investigation into Dr. Currie's role in the production of the Condor missile, which was developed by the Rockwell International Corporation.

In a letter of May 6 to Senator Thomas F. Eagleton, Democrat of Missouri, who had demanded the suspension of Dr. Currie, Richard A. Wiley, the Defense Department general counsel, said the Pentagon was "investigating all aspects" of Dr. Currie's relationship with Rockwell International. An investigation is also being conducted by a panel of the Joint Committee on Defense Production headed by Senator William Proxmire, Democrat of Wisconsin.

Warning by Admiral

An aide to Mr. Eagleton reported that a rear admiral in the Navy's legislative liaison office recently called to warn that if the Senator continued to criticize the Condor program, he could jeopardize future Navy contracts in Missouri, including the Harpoon missile program handled by the McDonnell Douglas Corporation in St. Louis.

Dr. Currie was "severely reprimanded" and docked one month's pay by Mr. Rumsfeld after it was disclosed that in violation of Pentagon "standards of conduct" regulations, he attended, over the last Labor Day weekend, a fishing lodge in the Bahamas owned by Rockwell International. Immediately after returning from the Bahamas, according to defense officials, he advocated a production go-ahead for the Condor, which had been encountering development and reliability problems.

In explaining the promotion of an official who had been reprimanded, Mr. Greener said that while Mr. Clements believes Dr. Currie exercised "poor judgment" in one particular case, he "continues to have full confidence" in him. With his elevation, Dr. Currie becomes by far the most important and influential figure in the Pentagon for defense contractors, in a position to decide which companies get research or production contracts. For example, he will now become the key figure in determining whether production should be ordered this fall on the B-1 strategic bomber, which is under development by Rockwell International.

Reports of Job Offers

Within the defense industry, there were reports that Dr. Currie had been offered six jobs, including some by major defense contractors when he leaves the Pentagon, which he is expected to do in January. There were earlier reports by defense contractors, denied by Dr. Currie, that about a year ago he made the rounds of defense companies inquiring about employment opportunities.

Federal "conflict-of-interest" laws do not prohibit a Government official from inquiring about or entertaining job offers, but the practice is that he informs his superiors of such moves.

Through a spokesman, Dr. Currie denied that he had received any specific job offers.

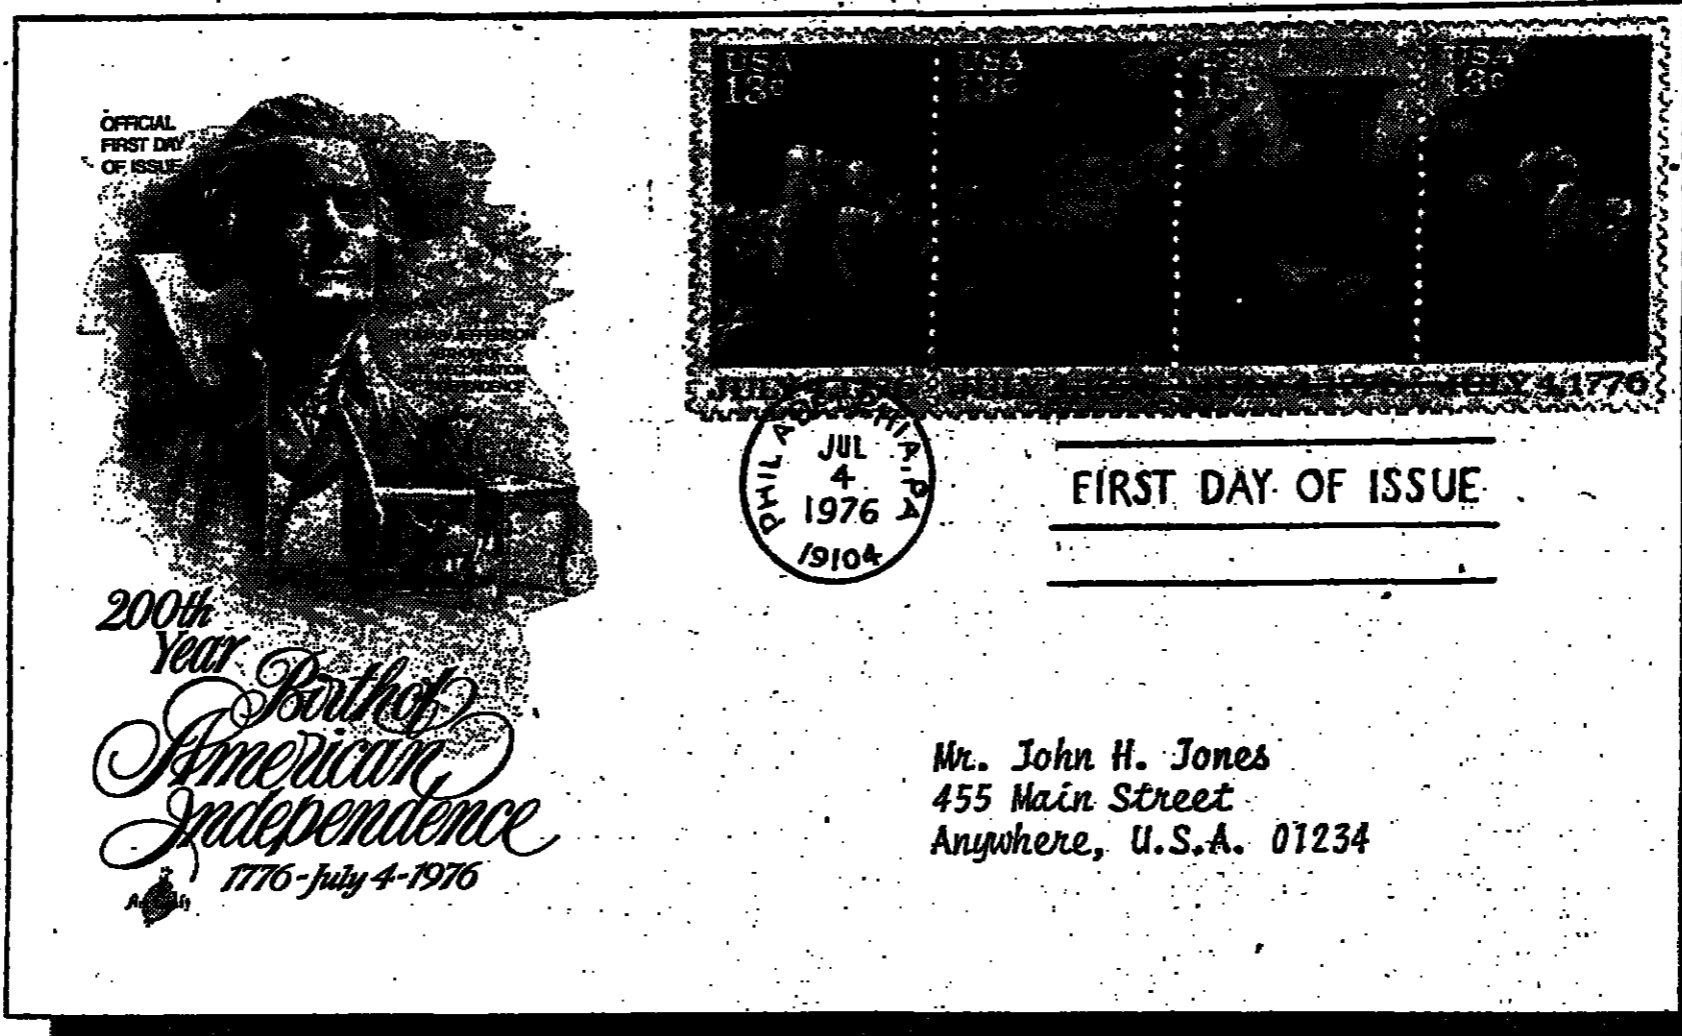

The elevation of Dr. Currie is part of a centralization of procurement in Government agencies that was recently ordered by the Office of Management and Budget. Each agency was directed to name an "acquisition executive" who would be responsible for managing all major procurement programs.

Mr. Clements went a step further by directing that Dr. Currie be the single, permanent chairman of the Defense Systems Acquisition Review Committee, which passes on the development and production of all weapons.

In pursuit of the concept of centralized management, in the opinion of some long-time Pentagon employees, a system of checks and balances over weapons programs is breaking down within the department.

In the past, development and procurement have been kept organizationally apart, in large measure because the developers, almost inevitably, acquire a vested interest in seeing their product go into production.

United States to Issue Official Bicentennial 4-Stamp Commemorative on July 4, 1976

Cover enlarged for illustrative purposes — Actual size 4 x 7.

FIRST DAY COVERS OF THIS IMPORTANT BICENTENNIAL COMMEMORATIVE MAY BE RESERVED NOW

ON JULY 4, 1976 THE UNITED STATES WILL ISSUE an historic 4-stamp tribute to America's 200th Birthday.

These stamps are the most important Bicentennial tribute released by the United States Government to date, and are destined to become a treasured Bicentennial commemoration.

A First Day Cover, as shown above, with the 4-stamps affixed will certainly be a treasured item for future generations.

WHAT IS A FIRST DAY COVER?

The United States government regularly (on average every 3-4 weeks) honors the important men, events and places in its history by issuing commemorative postage stamps. When a new stamp is issued, one and only one post office is designated to provide the official "First Day of Issue" postmark for that stamp.

A specially designed envelope bearing the new stamp issue, postmarked with the exact date of first issue of the officially designated post office, is a First Day Cover. As the officially designated post office usually bears a particular significance to the stamp... First Day Covers are valued remembrances of America's past.

SERVICE AVAILABLE... ACT NOW

A service is available whereby Americans can receive a First Day Cover for every U.S. commemorative stamp issue for $1.65 per month. Included in this price is a specially designed display page which provides all important historical information about the subject matter of the commemorative issue. In addition, subscribers are provided at no extra cost with a collector's album to house and display their First Day Covers in perfect condition.

Americans wishing to begin a collection of First Day Covers with the 4-stamp July 4, 1976 issue... as shown above... are urged to mail the order form below.

Is Far Back in Ohio, Has Rural Strength

By WILLIAM K. STEVENS
Special to The New York Times

COLUMBUS, Ohio, June 4—If there is a Republican candidate who could do more to help the rural areas of the country than any other, it is Jimmy Carter. He is simply better known in Ohio than Mr. Reagan, and the President's style of Republicanism may be comfortable to more voters.

Many politicians believe that many issues are breaking for the President, too—particularly the economic issue. Further, in the view of Kent B. McGough, the Republican state chairman, "people have such a deep regard for him [Mr. Ford] as an individual."

Indeed, even Mrs. Reiff says that "I'm not against Ford. I feel he's a good man." The reason she took the Reagan chairmanship, she said, was "I wanted to see how a conservative candidate stood in our community."

There is also the advantage of the Presidency itself, demonstrated last week when Mr. Ford seemed to declare himself in favor of a federally backed expansion of a nuclear power plant in the southern part of this district. The expansion would mean thousands of jobs.

Mr. Ford's stance won him the backing of Representative William H. Harsha, the district's congressman, who had been on the fence but is now said to be working hard for the President.

Katherine Guy says of Jimmy Carter: "I'm not sure anybody can be that sincere." As for Governor Brown, she thinks he has "a big ego" and that he is "on a lark."

Candidates Having Little Impact On San Fernando Valley Voters

By JOSEPH LELYVELD
Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES, June 4—With the cycle of Presidential primaries finally coming to a close, a curious contrast can be drawn between its beginnings three and a half months ago in the snows of New Hampshire and the climax, or anticlimax, that voters here in the suburban sprawl of the San Fernando Valley are now experiencing.

There are about 375,000 registered Democrats in the San Fernando Valley, three times as many as there are in the entire state of New Hampshire. But the valley has not seen anything even faintly similar to the intense face-to-face campaigning and house-to-house canvassing that went on in every New Hampshire town. In fact, except for the fleeting images on the television screens, there has been no campaign here at all.

Even the advertising campaigns on television and radio are thin. Between them, Jimmy Carter and Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. are spending less than two-thirds of what Senators George McGovern of South Dakota and Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota invested in broadcast commercials in 1972. If the inflation of the last four years is figured in, the figure is less than one-half.

That may help to explain why the campaign seems so unfocused and diffuse in the valley, a passing intrusion in the quiet suburban streets with their semitropical gardens and simple stucco homes.

Others tried to explain reasons. Ralph Prettymann, an insurance agent who said he was voting for Mr. Brown "partly to help him along with his future," said that the former Georgia Governor's "appearance irritates me." Mike Ferraro called him "too cocky." And Jim Wilson said of Mr. Carter: "To me, he's just Mickey Mouse on wheels. I don't know I can't take him seriously."

A grade school teacher said she felt it to be a mistake to elect a Southerner, then added, "I don't want to give my vote to anyone I don't want to give my vote to, if you know what I mean." Apparently, she meant she did not want to be stampeded.

Few voters seem to have passed through the stage of sorting out their impressions to that of calculating the effect of their votes on the process of selecting a nominee. However, in one household, that of Paul and Caroline Kirsch, a lively debate on just that point has been going on for several days.

The Kirsches were on the fringes of the radical student movement in their college days. Then Mr. Kirsch got a doctorate in history with a thesis on French fascists of the 1930's. Now he dispatches taxis for the Beverly Hills Cab Company, a circumstance that leads him to bitterly resent Governor Brown's parsimonious approach to university finances.

"We're the hope of the 60's that fell flat on its nose," Mrs. Kirsch said. "Now we're in barbeque land, and it's a mad scramble every day."

Mrs. Kirsch believes that the failure of California liberals to work for Mr. Brown's father in 1966 insured the

Carter Shows Rare Skill in Courting And Gaining a National Constituency

By CHARLES MOHR
Special to The New York Times

COLUMBUS, Ohio, June 4—Jimmy Carter is showing a rare skill in courting for national office a constituency of complex and widely diverse parts.

Their audiences often vary remarkably, and most candidates do speak with at least different nuances to different crowds.

But no one seems to be more skillful than Mr. Carter in evoking the loyalties of a wide range of American voters. Two occasions in his campaign this week provided an interesting example.

Praises King

In Los Angeles yesterday the former Georgia Governor gave one of the most moving speeches on the American racial dilemma heard in a long time. Speaking to a predominantly black audience in Watts, near the so-called Charcoal Alley neighborhood once burned out in slum riots, Mr. Carter dedicated a new psychiatric ward of the Martin Luther King Jr. Hospital and paid an extended tribute to the late Dr. King.

"Martin Luther King Jr.," Mr. Carter said in his soft, resonant voice, "was a great scientist of his generation. He was the doctor to a sick society."

"He was the man, more than any other in his generation, who gazed upon the great wall of racial segregation and saw that it could be destroyed by the power of love. I sometimes think that a Southerner of my generation can most fully understand the meaning and impact of Martin Luther King's life."

Mr. Carter went on to describe the "slow and painful" change that began in the 1950's, saying, "Little towns like mine were almost torn apart by fear and resentment."

Ideal America Waits

Mr. Carter said tribute to the success of Dr. King and President Kennedy and Johnson in expanding the body of civil rights legislation. And, as he has done before, he said the liberation of the South from decades of racial conflict "made it possible for a Southerner like me to stand before you this evening as a serious candidate for President of the United States."

"I could not be standing here if it had not been for Martin Luther King Jr.," he said. "For all our progress, we still live in a land held back by oppression and injustice. We still have a far way to go."

"The America we long for is not there yet, but it is still out there, somewhere ahead of us."

Some Mild Comments

"It seems like nobody's really surfacing," said Dan Murray, a spokesman, who commented mildly that Mr. Carter "affects me in a good way, sort of," that Morris K. Udall "impresses me kind of nice," and that Governor Brown "probably wouldn't be too bad."

The responses of voters in a section called Sherman Oaks were by no means all that tolerant of the candidates, but the same tentative note was often struck. The ultimate beneficiary seemed to be the native son, Mr. Brown, who had the backing of more than half the voters, who said they had made up their minds even though none of them appear to think he could be nominated this year.

Indeed, most of the Brown supporters appeared to have misgivings about him, mainly doubts about his motives for running and readiness for the office. Usually, they explained their votes by expressing even deeper misgivings about Mr. Carter.

networks at once—a device known as "roadblocking" in the time buyers' jargon—Mr. Carter assures himself the largest political audience of the campaign so far and, according to experts in the field, one of the largest television audiences ever assembled in this country for a paid political broadcast, possibly the largest.

When the talk begins, according to audience surveys, television sets in an estimated total of 28 million homes will be tuned to the three networks. An estimated total of 43 million adults will be watching, about 30 percent of all Americans over the age of 18.

The time on the three networks will cost the Carter campaign a little less than $50,000. If the campaign had sought statewide exposure of a similar intensity in the three states in which Mr. Carter goes before the voters on Tuesday, it would have cost nearly as much in the unlikely event that the campaign managed to buy the time on local stations in all the television markets in those states.

$800,000 in 2 Weeks

In its drive to finish the primary season with as many delegates as possible, the Carter campaign has spent $800,000 on television and radio in the last two weeks, according to Gerald Rafshoon, the head of the Atlanta advertising agency that prepares the Carter commercials.

It was hoped, Mr. Rafshoon said, that the talk would have some impact on uncommitted delegates from the nonprimary states.

In elaborating his "vision of America," Mr. Carter seeks to broaden the perception many voters have had of him as a Exact Replica of Old-Time Single Acting Engine. Educational And Fun. Control Its Speed! Blow Its Whistle!

Have the fun of building a steam engine that works... that's an exact replica of the old steam. Then see how it can power a model car, a boat, a train, a plane, and more! See how, in actual operation, it vividly demonstrates many of the fascinating, basic fundamentals of the steam engine, so important around 1900. This uses a Single Acting Engine (power stroke occurs only when the piston moves in one direction). Your dry-lab steam power plant runs on tap water. You control its speed with the throttle valve. You make its whistle blow. Under adult supervision, this realistic and powerful steam engine (with automatic safety valve) will provide countless hours of instructive enjoyment to mechanically minded youngsters. Used in many physics classes, it's fun for adults, too. Explicit assembly and operating instructions are included, along with 20 dry-lab tables. Easily assemble the kit's 35 expertly crafted, precision parts in 2 to 3 hours. Then turn on the steam and watch the fun. Base is 7 1/2" sq. height, incl. stack is 8 1/2". length is 6".

candidate and a man. His closest campaign advisors believe that he has suffered in recent weeks not only from the attacks of his rivals for the nomination but also from the fact that whenever the voters have seen him on television, he has seemed to be preoccupied with his delegate tallies and status as front-runner.

Issues Lose

"Our major problem in this campaign has been the coverage of the television networks," Patrick Caddell, Mr. Carter's pollster, said in a telephone interview. "If Jimmy answers 52 questions on issues and one political question, it's the one political question that hits the air."

At one point in his talk, Mr. Carter quotes the singer Bob Dylan by name, saying that the America he envisions is "busy being born." The talk was reportedly drafted by the candidate's newest speech writer, Patrick Anderson.

It represents Mr. Carter's first purchase of network time. Ronald Reagan, Representative Morris K. Udall and Senator Frank Church have all purchased network time in recent months for their Presidential campaigns, but they were satisfied with one network. No appeal for funds is included in Mr. Carter's talk.

Meanwhile, Mr. Carter disclosed today that he had canceled a campaign swing to California that had been scheduled for Monday evening because it would have involved extensive flying time without much productive campaigning.

He and his aides declined to agree with assessments that the move had been dictated by poll data and other indications that Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California was running far ahead of Mr. Carter in that state.

Mr. Carter campaigned in Ohio today and then flew to New Jersey tonight for a week-end of campaigning.

cado in 1967 when Mr. Kreuzer said, market avocado. I've grown lots of them. Many have failed, too."

"I started my avocado in the soil," Mr. Kreuzer went on. He shuns the traditional method of poking toothpicks in an avocado pit and letting it sit in water until roots form. Nor did he cut the seedling in half when it reached 6 or 7 inches, to force branching.

"I planted the pit so the top half was exposed and let it grow," he said. "Nothing specific or exact. The potting soil at planting time was just sort of ordinary."

'Special Formula'

"But now I have worked out a special formula for soil that I like and the avocado was transplanted into it."

Here is the Kreuzer soil recipe: two parts commercial potting soil, one part vermiculite and one part perlite. In the bottom of the pot, he placed a lot of crushed rock. The mixture drains well and doesn't pack solid.

Fertilizer? "In the past I fed the plant with a liquid fertilizer," he said. "But I'm not conscientious about feeding. Recently, I have tried some of these new slow-release fertilizers."

Watering is about as casual. Brenda Kreuzer remarked that was exclusively her husband's activity. "I just enjoy having the plants around," she said. "Sometimes when Justin comes home from work, the plants are droopy. He's so embarrassed to find them neglected, he waters them before dinner."

Although Mr. Kreuzer loves plants and obviously grows them well, he claims innocence from any expertise. Professionally, a research scientist for Perkin-Elmer, a scientific instrument company, he does not apply any of his laboratory methods to greenery, but rather relaxes and enjoys it.

One possible clue to Mr. Kreuzer's success was the placing of a chandelier with a 60-watt tungsten lamp just above the avocado, and, he added, "Last year we installed a room humidifier to make the house better for people comfort, but apparently there were some good side effects for the plants."

Justin Kreuzer's blooming avocado has long panicles of small flowers.

The New York Times/Rosar W. Snow

Flowers form at the tips of branches and are supported on long wiry stems. The individual flowers are small, about a half-inch across, greenish in color with a six-part calyx that suggests petals. "I figured it would be a good idea to pollinate the flowers with a camel's hair brush. The flowers don't open until late in the morning and by afternoon of the same day, the pollen appears ripe. So I brush the center of each flower. Fruit usually sets but it doesn't develop much beyond six or seven millimeters and drops off. I've cut the fruits open to show the children but they are mostly water."

Ethnic Escape From the Quick and the Frozen

By MIMI SHERATON

As difficult as it can be for a visitor to a city to get beyond the facade of must-see all-purpose continental restaurants that natives always seem proudest of, that is precisely what I was determined to do during a recent stay in Chicago.

On the advice of Diana Kennedy, author of "The Cuisines of Mexico," I set out for the city's lower west side, to the once Bohemian Pilsen section, now largely Mexican. Barber shops, book stores, banks and travel agents had in their windows posters of Mexican heroes such as Juarez, Zapata and Villa, poignant ballads about mi querida and mi corazon tumbled out of record shops, and supermercados such as the Blanca Panaderia, are veritable fiestas.

Decorations in Array

Pink, purple, turquoise, green and yellow paper confetti piñatas hung from the Blanca Panaderia's ceiling, along with carved and painted walking sticks, toy animals and maracas. Shelves in the bakery section held at least 50 varieties of pan dulces, sweet coffee rolls done up in rings, twists, ovals, and braids, topped with pastel frostings, white sugar, egg washes, sesame seeds or a rainbow of colored candies.

More cuts of pork than I knew existed were displayed in the butcher's showcase, along with big, puffy, golden sheets of chicharones, the pork skin crackling so deliciously when dipped into fiery salsa verde.

The vegetable section burst with feathery bunches of parsley and pungent fresh cilantro, enough tropical fruits to suggest a headdress for Carmen Miranda, tiny emerald-green tomatoes, prickly cactus leaves, and at least eight kinds of chili peppers, including ancho, jalapeña, habaneros, serranos, and more, glistening green and fresh, or dried and like mahogany leather, each adding its own form of sudden death to timid palates.

The most memorable bit of food I ate during my four-day stay in Chicago was purchased from a street vendor outside this market. Taking corn on the cob from a steamer and stripping off its husk, he brushed it with sweet melted butter, then sprinkled it with fresh lime juice, salt and a generous peppering of hot chili powder—a taste sensation I mean to repeat as soon as local corn is available.

The Tortilleria Popocatepetl was the next stop, a big cool concrete hall in which tortillas were made by the thousands daily, in a completely automated system. The tangy smell of dried corn kernels swelling and curing in lime water was damp and pleasant. The corn mash soaked in giant vats, then was rolled, cut and baked on a giant conveyor belt. Packing was done by hand, and the fresh warm tortillas were soothing and addictive, although they almost cried out for a filling of chili, green tomato sauce and cilantro.

By then we were starved enough for lunch and stopped into a slightly raunchy luncheonette, Nuevo Leon, for some satisfying if greasy tamales, enchiladas, tacos and tostados, plus a dry but spicy grilled skirt steak, refried beans, yellow rice and a bracing soup-stew of beef, corn, squash, onions, carrots and potatoes. All of this, plus two hamburgers for children, sodas and iced teas came to $10.

Dinner that night, fortunately, came late, at Miomir's, a Serbian club that was huge, tavern-like, noisy and jam packed but amusing and with really quite sensational food.

To the plaintive strains of gypsy violins, Russian chorale music and much hand-clapping and foot stamping, we sipped and ate ourselves into a warm and hazy stupor, beginning with blue-blinging hot slivovitz, the golden plum brandy of the Balkans. With this was served kajmak, a buttery cheese spread, black bread and ajvar, a puree dip of eggplant, hot peppers, celery and onions.

Corba, a peppery beef and vegetable soup, and a salad of tomatoes, onions, cucumbers and brndza—dry white sheep's milk cheese—followed. All entrees were equally savory, equally gargantuan in size. Cevapici was a skewered sausage of ground veal and beef, and ravnici, chunks of marinated pork tenderloin broiled on skewers. Lovacka snical, a breaded beef schnitzel in a mild wine sauce and muckalica, much like a spicy goulash of veal, beef, onions and peppers brought us blissfully, sublimely to the end of our ropes.

Filled to Satiety

Although it broke our hearts, we simply could not negotiate the flaky strudel or elaborate palacinka, the filled Serbian crepes that were dessert, but I have noted them for the next time.

After two days spent nibbling the lifeless convenience foods at the National Restaurant Association trade show, as an antidote, I ate my final meal in Chicago at Tulpe, a small luncheonette in the Lithuanian section of the city.

Creamy, hot, pink beet borscht and green pea soup flecked with lightly smoked ham were almost enough to wipe out memories of the quick and the frozen. If not, that was certainly accomplished with lean, crusty roast pork loin, garlic-scented veal frankfurters on bacon-flavored sauerkraut, both with properly dry and mealy boiled potatoes. My favorite entree, however, were the meat-filled noodle dough turnovers, varenyky, topped with crumbly bits of crisp bacon, a drizzling of melted butter and globs of sour cream.

All of this, plus a dessert of pancakes filled with apples and cheese, much like blintzes, came, to just $3.50 a person, a lot of food for the money, quantitatively as well as qualitatively.

Thus fortified, it took no willpower at all to resist the airline food on my homeward flight.

Women Scholars Outnumber Men in Winning Salk Stipends

By NADINE BROZAN

For the first time in the 21 years that the city has financed its Jonas E. Salk scholarships for City University students accepted by medical schools, women outnumbered the male winners—by five to three.

And by the end of the ceremonies held last week just two days before the entire system shut down, Roslyn Feder, 19, of Brooklyn College, had turned her stipend over to Ann Danoff, 25, of Hunter College, who as the top-ranked honorary winner, was next in line for the scholarship.

Miss Feder turned back $3,500 because her own expenses for the Rockefeller University-Cornell University Medical College combined M.D.-Ph.D. program will be covered by a fellowship.

Pool of 27

The women, who were chosen from a pool of 27 candidates by a faculty committee from the Mount Sinai School of Medicine, did not seem to regard the fact that they had outranked the men as anything special.

According to a conversation during a gathering before the award presentations, barriers against women in science and medicine seemed to have had no effect on their climb to the top of the academic ladder.

Only Karen Schneider, 20, who was admitted to Phi Beta Kappa in her junior year and who graduated summa cum laude from Queens College, recalled any reference to the fact she is a woman during the course of applying to medical school. She will enter the Cornell University Medical College.

"I was asked, 'How do you envision yourself as a woman doctor?'" she said. "I remember thinking that there was a group of men out there who wouldn't have to answer such a question."

The Salk scholarships, which are based on merit, not need, were established in 1955 by the Board of Estimate to honor the 1934 graduate of City College, who discovered the first anti-polio vaccine. City officials proposed to Dr. Salk that he be given a ticker-tape parade, but he suggested that scholarships would be more appropriate.

Who are these young women of notable achievement? They are the daughters of a cardiologist (Miss Feder) and a bathroom supplies assembler (Rosemarie Newman), a draper's retailer (Miss Schneider) and an art therapist (Miss Danoff), a midwife-turned nurse (Pauline Walks) and a bookkeeper (Ilene Rosenberg).

They came to college from such disparate institutions as Yeshiva University High School (Miss Feder) and Excelsior High School in Kingston, Jamaica, W.I. (Miss Newman). Miss Schneider plays the piano every day, Miss Feder is a scuba diver. Miss Newman is captain of the nationally known Lehman College fencing team.

The divergent ways in which they reached medical school acceptance were perhaps best illustrated by Roslyn Feder and the student to whom she gave her stipend, Ann Danoff.

"I think I was always headed in that direction," said Miss Feder, who entered college after her junior year. "But by the time I finished high school, there was no question. We like to think we make our own decisions but we cannot help but be influenced by our home environment."

Scientific Endeavors

Her father, Dr. Walter Feder, is director of cardiology at Maimonides Medical Center and professor of medicine at Downstate Medical Center, and her own academic past is studded with scientific endeavors. She conducted research on the isolation of RNA, a basic genetic material, at both the Weizmann Institute of Science in Israel and at the Cold Spring Harbor (L.I.) Laboratory and has published articles in professional journals.

By contrast, Miss Danoff, who will go to George Washington University School of Medicine, took a circuitous route to medicine. Now about to be graduated from Hunter College, she first entered Brooklyn College in 1967 and dropped in and out of academia to pursue a dance career with several modern dance companies including that of Twyla Tharp. "Then I decided I had always been interested in science, research and in dealing with people," she said.

No one was more surprised than her family.

"I grew up in a house of artists and social workers," she said.

Jefferson a Winner at the National Gallery

Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON—When the National Gallery of Art looked around for a subject for its Bicentennial exhibition, it soon turned out that there was really no contest. Ideally, there was needed a theme with Presidential overtones; one that would exalt, enlighten and if possible entertain; one that had not been worked over by other institutions; and one that would suit the building, suit the gallery's director and his staff, and suit the city.

"Rubens Peale with Geranium," an 1801 oil by Rembrandt Peale, is in the exhibition at the National Gallery.

As for the choice of President, Jefferson won by a landslide. "Calvin Coolidge and Cubism" was not even put to the vote. "The Execution of Ulysses S. Grant" was likewise born. Jefferson was the man. But "The Age of Jefferson?" Too sprawling. "The Achievement of Jefferson?" Better; but it raised too many questions that lay outside the functions of the National Gallery. "The Age of Jefferson" was the least theme. Jefferson lived much by the eye; his gaze remained well into old age the exceptional eloquence we see in Thomas Sully's full-length portrait of 1821; he stood out at all times for his taste, his judgment and his powers of advocacy. The National Gallery looked no further.

All this makes first-rate museum material. Less so is that "statless faith in woman" that Americans in Jefferson's view had inherited from the British. Jefferson visited England only once, and even the resourceful Mr. Adams is hard put to find much that he commented upon, beyond the domains of country house architecture and landscape gardening. (Even the notion of an open university campus, which Jefferson initiated in Virginia, is the direct antithesis of the enclosed courtyards of Oxford and Cambridge.) However, Joseph Wright of Derby's huge painting, "Experiment With an Air Pump," looks more than ever like one of the great documents of human curiosity; and we must salute the delicate sense of history that has caused the Queen of England to send over a painting by P. J. de Louthembourg showing the British militia on maneuvers (and not looking any too professional either).

But of course the eye of Jefferson must be judged not so much by any list of what he himself savored as by the difference, that is, to America. And that difference was enormous. He taught Americans how to build and what to build. He taught Americans to prize their environment when it was in any way extraordinary and to improve it when it wasn't. He taught Americans to learn from the Old World and to put their learning to independent use. There is not a public building, not a museum, not a university of consequence that does not somewhere reflect his inquiring and constructive intelligence. No one could claim Jefferson an original architect—nor would he have claimed the title—but he was in all things a resourceful emulator who knew the best models when he saw them. He didn't get to design the White House when he entered (anonymously) the competition; but he made the most of it when he lived in it as President. Rembrandt Peale's portrait of "Rubens Peale With a Geranium" is in the show to remind us of how Jefferson filled the East Room with new and genuine furniture he looked after himself and used as a bower for his favorite mocking-bird.

'Wine Untouched' From Norway: Intelligent Play About Five Women

WINE UNTOUCHED by Bjorg Vik. Directed by Robert Lytle. Running time 101 minutes. Cast: Susan Kellerman, Lillian, fat, simple, sweet, turning all her energy to being the mother of four children, and Gry, a spinster, cold, self-contained and the complete working woman. There is Evelyn, a fey, married but childless painter, seemingly the happiest of the five, though she drinks the most.

whole it is written with devastating intelligence. The five women all have a double aspect: as they appear, and as they are revealed. There are the two extremes: Lillian, fat, simple, sweet, turning all her energy to being the mother of four children, and Gry, a spinster, cold, self-contained and the complete working woman. There is Evelyn, a fey, married but childless painter, seemingly the happiest of the five, though she drinks the most.

GOING OUT Guide
WHAT'S COOKING? Robert Sherwood's Revolutionary War comedy, "Small War on Murray Hill," will well-received by the critics, ran only briefly on Broadway back in 1957. Things are different now, at Bicentennial time, with several revivals in the suburbs. Mr. Sherwood's factually based patriotic show is now in professional hands at Theater-Off-Park, ending the company's first year at 40 East 35th Street, between Park and Madison Avenues, in the Unity Community Church of New York.

Bicentennial concert by the Welch Choral group takes place tomorrow at 2 P.M. at the Museum of Bronx History at 3296 Bainbridge Avenue. Classical works derived from folk themes by Brahms, Saint-Saens, Janacek, Villa-Lobos and Vaughan Williams make up tomorrow's recital by the Golden Attic Chamber Ensemble at 3 P.M. at the Staten Island Museum, 75 Stuyvesant Place, near the ferry terminal. Admission is $3, and $2 for students and the elderly.

A scene from the Royal Danish Ballet production of "The Guards of Amager" take the Romantic ballet away from those flights of poetic fancy we find in "La Sylphide" and "Giselle," and to offer a more natural and more folkloric approach. In "The Guards of Amager," the atmosphere has something of the naturalism of Holberg and even more Bourneville's contemporary, Hans Christian Andersen.

Bourneville specialized in the ballet d'action, probably with rather more mime and character dancing than classical dance, and a slightly sentimental story, telling with humor of love, misunderstanding and ending with a divertissement.

"The Guards of Amager" is representative of this whole approach. With its rustic dances—typical dances from Amager, a suburb of Copenhagen, which were also used by Galotti in 1786 —and its tale of a philandering officer brought to heel and back to love by a disguised wife during a masquerade, the whole thing is as Danish as chimney-sweeps and cheese. And the décor by Bjorn Winblad, with its bold floral designs, is modern Danish, just as the then contemporary Tivoli music by V. C. Holm is old Danish.

No company in the world could dance "The Guards of Amager" like the Danes, nor probably would want to. The handsome Edouard de Puys (based on a real-life character, by the way, an operatic baritone who first sang Mozart's Don Giovanni in Copenhagen), the errant commandant of the Volunteer Corps of Lifeguards (they were defending Copenhagen against Napoleon in 1808), was most exquisitely played by Henning Kronstam and Kjeld Noack had a lot of fun as the oafishly bumptious Staffen.

Among the women, Vivi Flindt made an enchanting yet dazzling Louise, the betrayed wife, while in the masquerade pas de trois, which leads the final reels and is allotted most of the ballet's classical dancing, Inge Jensen and Eva Kloborg and, particularly, that impeccable Bourneville stylist, Flemming Ryberg, all proved excellent. This is a lovely old ballet done, in this production, by Hans Breda, assisted by Lizzie Rodde, with just the loving care it deserves.

So was the performance of "La Sylphide," in which Sorrelle Englund, Peter Martin and Arne Villumsen were all even better than on the first night of the season.

Al Green Has Up Night Singing at Uris Theater

By JOHN ROCKWELL

Al Green is a performer who gives new meaning to the word "erratic," and his onstage variability has done much to dim a career that not too many years ago looked to be the most distinguished among contemporary black male singers.

Thursday night Mr. Green opened a seven-performance week-end run at the Uris Theater. His first show was immeasurably superior to a disastrous outing this observ- er suffered through with him a couple of years back at the Apollo Theater. At its best, it was incontestably brilliant. But by the end one had the impression that many in the audience were more puzzled than pleased.

Mr. Green's virtues remain extraordinary. He is one of the great legato phrasers of singing—any kind of singing. His ability to stretch and sustain a high-lying vocal line is the sort that any vocal con- noisseur would applaud and that brings screams of enjoyment from women, who fig- ured prominently in Thurs- day's crowd.

And for this run he is supported by some first-rate singers and instrumentalists, and an attractive bunch of arrangements. When Mr. Green was skitting along the outer limits of rhythmic li- cense, almost slipping off into self-indulgent anarchy but actually teasing and coloring the line, he was simply superb.

And even his mannerisms worked for him, sometimes. There is a whole genre of black singers who appeal as innocent children of music, and as sex symbols to be mothered—one thinks of Stevie Wonder above all. Mr. Green manages to look like

Al Green

Mr. Wonder at times, and his strange alternating smiles and grimaces, his seemingly uncontrolled pacing about the stage and his extremely odd relation to the microphone—He is forever fussing with it, and backing off from it to maulibility—can all work to sustain the mood of his singing.

But eventually all that eccentricity becomes, distract- ing, and the mood craves together completely for him, and Thursday's performance—the best this observer has seen from him—only represents a middling effort. All great artists balance inspira- tion and formula in their per- formances. While one would hate to see Mr. Green become a programmed automaton, he simply has to temper his ex- cesses if he hopes to keep up a big-time career.

The show opens with Ash- ford and Simpson, a vocal duo that has written some fine songs for others but doesn't have enough vocal strength or spontaneity of stage personality to avoid ins- tance boredom.

Music: Songs of Cohan

Five Young Performers Present Tunes at the Theater Club's Cabaret

George M. Cohan, with his flag-waving and markish sentimentality, may not be these days. But five lively young singers are making a delightful evening of the old Yankee Doodle Dandy's songs in the Cabaret of the Manhattan Theater Club, 321 East 73d Street.

"Life Is Like a Musical Comedy," which is the title of the program (and the title of a Cohan song), seems to have accurately expressed his outlook. But despite the sim- plistic attitude of many of his songs, they have such an enthusiastic bounce or a charming lilt that they resist parody. Jack Allison, who conceived and directed the production, has kept the singers in an energetic, straightforward stance, colored with touches of period style and only an occasional raised eyebrow.

"Over There," along with a less-familiar view of Cohan, the social philosopher ("There's a contentment in the deep stumps of town," he assures us in "Rich or Poor," or "It's the man who has the dough who gets the call"). But it is the bright, sunny sweep of his songs, in styles that look back to the Flor- dora days and reach forward into the musicals of the late 20's, that leaves the deepest impression.

The five singers—Alice Cannon, Melanie Chartoff, David Dyer, Wayne Scherzer and Barbara Worthington—all keep the performance on a sparkling level, but Mr. Scherzer hits a particular high point as he prances through "I'm So Happy" with some saucer-eyed echoes of Eddie Cantor.

Divorce Suit Filed By Senator Brooke

Senator Edward W. Brooke has filed suit in Cambridge for a divorce from his wife, the former Remigia Ferrar-Seaco, his Boston office announced yesterday. The couple have lived apart for a number of years and a spokesman said that Mrs. Brooke was not expected to contest the suit.

The Massachusetts Republican, who is 56 years old, was inducted into an all-black infantry unit at the outbreak of World War II and rose to the rank of captain. As an intelligence operative, he worked with partisans in Italy, where he met his wife. They have two daughters, Remigia, 27, and Edwina, 24. The family lives in Roxbury until he was elected State Attorney General in 1962 and later moved to suburban Newton. Mr. Brooke entered the Senate in 1966.

An aide to Senator Brooke said that Mrs. Brooke was at the couple's home on St. Martin in the Caribbean.

When Representative Barbara Jordan, Democrat of Texas, is the commencement speaker for John Jay College of Criminal Justice tomorrow at Carnegie Hall, Daimery M. Fuentes will be the valedictorian and Marian Moser the salutatorian. Mrs. Fuentes and her husband, Gustavo, both Cuban-born and now Queens Village residents, will graduate together and then plan to go to Arizona. She has been accepted for the Ph.D. program in clinical psychology at Arizona State University. Mr. Fuentes has been working at the Vera Institute and expects to go to law school at a future date.

Nora Ann Gonzalez, 32, will have her nine youngest brothers and sisters from Jackson Heights in the audience. After her father died 15 years ago, Miss Gonzalez refused to let the family scatter, received legal guardianship and spent 10 years raising the children—before John Jay's SEEK and ASPIRA programs brought her into college. "With only five children left at home," Miss Gonzalez said, she "will have the time" to do graduate work.

Alan Alda, who has only a few nurses to cope with on his "M*A*S*H" television show, will discuss the equal rights amendment at the 50th biennial convention of the American Nurses' Association in Atlantic City. Mr. Alda, a member of the American Committee for the International Women's Year, will appear Monday with Ely Petersen, co-chairman of ERAmerica, at a luncheon sponsored by the Nurses' Coalition for Action in Politics, known as N-CAP.

Raquel Welch has withdrawn from her engagement at the Westbury (L.I.) Music Fair because of the death of her father, Armond Tezada, in Los Angeles. Mr. Tezada, aged 62, was hospitalized for surgery 10 days ago and developed complications. Miss Welch had flown west when her father died early yesterday. Joey Heatherton has taken over the remaining weekend performances of the music fair.

Maggie Kuhn, who at age 65 founded the Gray Panthers five years ago to oppose age-discrimination, has been chosen as recipient of the 1976 Ministry to Women award of the Unitarian-Universalist Women's Federation. The presentation will be June 24 at the denomination's general assembly in Ithaca.

It was jaws, apparently, that kept President Idi Amin of Uganda from keeping his promise last week to open the Suez Canal in honor of the Egyptian Army's 1973 crossing into Sinai. The Cairo magazine Mussawar said he had been dissuaded by Egyptian security officials because numerous sharks had entered the canal in the eight years it was closed to shipping.

An award to William O. Douglas from the New Jersey branch of the American Civil Liberties Union will be accepted on behalf of the retired Supreme Court justice by his wife, Cathy, tonight at a dinner in New Brunswick. Mr. Douglas is undergoing therapy for partial paralysis at his home in Washington. Young Democrat, who is George's first black Congressman in 101 years, will speak at the dinner.

The United States marshal's office in Boston reported yesterday that it had transferred Susan Saxe to the Metropolitan Correction Center in New York City Wednesday. Miss Saxe spent more than four years as a fugitive on the F.B.I.'s most-wanted list. She is charged with murder and bank robbery in a 1970 holdup in which a Boston patrolman was shot to death.

However, the United States Marshal in New York, Frank A. Juliano, after first insisting that he had never heard of Miss Saxe, said that she was "no longer" in the correction center here and he did not know where she was. Nancy Gertner, Miss Saxe's lawyer, had sought to have her transferred closer to Boston from the Worcester County (Mass.) jail to prepare for the Sept. 15 trial. The Justice Department office in Boston said that the move to a Federal facility would be economical because it had been paying the county to keep Miss Saxe in its jail.

A Federal judge in Baltimore yesterday freed N. Dale Anderson, the former county executive who was convicted in the 1974 Maryland corruption investigation that led to the resignation Vice President Agnew. Mr. Anderson, who had complained of ill health and family financial troubles, served 13½ months of his five-year Federal prison term.

The subject of a meeting in Beverly Hills, Calif., attended this week by 300 industry professionals was "Working Together: Overcoming Obstacles to Cooperation in the Talent Business," Irving Azoff, manager of the Eagles rock music group, was presiding when he gave the floor to Richard Romanoff, a producer of Turnaround, Irv. Mr. Romanoff said, pointing to a young woman behind Mr. Azoff. She handed Mr. Azoff a subpoena. "I'm suing you for $1-million," announced Mr. Romanoff, who said later the suit was over failure of the Eagles to appear at the New England Folk Festival in Woodbury, Mass. "I'll see you in court," said Mr. Romanoff, giving the floor back to Mr. Azoff.

CON ED REQUESTS A 10.4% RATE RISE

Move Comes 3 Months After 5% Increase Took Effect

By FRANCES CERRA

Less than three months after a 5 percent increase in Consolidated Edison's electric rates took effect, the company yesterday requested a new increase of more than double that amount.

The increase, which would bring in $249.8 million, would not take effect until May 1977, and the company is not asking for a temporary rate rise in the meantime.

In justifying its request, Consolidated Edison said it expected to spend more than $5 billion on new construction over the next 10 years. Those expenditures, the company said, as well as redeeming nearly $800 million in bonds over the same period, will require the company to get major financing from the capital markets, which now are closed to it "as a practical matter."

"It is imperative," said Arthur Hauspurg, the utility's president, that "our company improve its earnings and convince the investment community that we have permanently moved out of the crisis which engulfed us in 1974."

Other Charge Asked

At the same time the company announced its request for the 10.4 percent general rate increase, it also said that it wanted to double the differential between its summer and winter rates. Electricity now costs 0.3 of a cent more for each kilowatt hour during the summer than in the winter. The company would like to increase the differential to 0.6 cent. The differential was created because Con Edison had to build generating plants to meet summer peak demands. Thus some of the capacity lies idle in the winter, and the Public Service Commission decided, in part to encourage conservation, that those who create the demand for electricity in the summer should pay more for it.

If the increase is granted and the summer differential widened, the bill of the average New York City residential customer would rise during the winter from $24.43 a month to $26.89, and in the summer from

Student Who Failed Kills Professor and

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 4 (AP)—The world of Patrick C. Do crumbled when a Florida State University professor, James R. Fisher, informed the Hong Kong native that he had failed a crucial oral examination for a doctorate degree in biochemistry.

After brooding for more than a week, Mr. Do, 28 years old, walked into Mr. Fisher's office, shot the 48-year-old professor once in the head and then fired a bullet into his own brain. Both men died.

University officials and the police described those events in yesterday's murder-suicide. A university spokesman said that Mr. Do, a British citizen, apparently gave no warning before walking into Dr. Fisher's office at about 1 P.M. and opening fire.

"People in the office next door said they heard no arguing of any kind, just two shots," said Mike Beaudoin, Florida state's information director. Gregory Choppin, chairman of the chemistry department, said that neither Mr. Do nor Dr. Fisher had mentioned any dispute or hard feelings over the examination.

"Dr. Fisher was his research director and he was the one who informed Mr. Do he had failed," said Mr. Choppin. "I didn't know him [Do] well, but he didn't strike me as being the excitable sort. I guess the failure after nearly four years of study and work was too much for him."

Mr. Do enrolled at Florida State in 1972 as a graduate student after earning an undergraduate degree from the State University of New York at Ontario and was scheduled to complete work on his doctorate next year.

Dr. Fisher, the father of two sons, moved in 1953 from Texas at Austin, president of the American University, has been actively involved in union faculty Do's closest friend, Joseph Kong.

SUSPECT OF OFFICE

A Brooklyn resident arrested after robbing a store yesterday was charged with the murder of a police officer who was killed by a bullet fired from a car in the Bronx last week.

strengthening of ties with neighboring utilities including the Long Island Lighting Company. $52 billion for its distribution system, including the relocation of facilities because of customer moves and the replacement of existing but outdated equipment.

$500 million for production of electricity, including construction of the Storm King pump storage project and the replacement of existing but outdated generation equipment.

$500 million for gas and steam improvements, including construction of a new steam plant.

Recent surveys by independent agencies have found that Consolidated Edison's rate of 7.9 cent per kilowatt hour is the highest in the country. The second highest is the 3.8 cent rate of the Public Service Electric and Gas Company of New Jersey.

If the company is granted the rate increase, it will be the sixth since 1970. Last February, the Public Service Commission granted the company $114.4 million of the $458 million requested. At the time, the company expressed disappointment with the decision and said it would "only hasten the day when we must again seek a rate increase."

consolidation of the company's debt. The bill of an average residential customer in Westchester County, who uses 500 kilowatt hours a month, would rise from $44.90 to $49.83 in the winter, and from $46.58 to $53.19 in the summer.

In his statement, justifying the company's need for the rate increase, Mr. Hauspurg noted that the company's earnings had improved since April 1974, when it decided to omit its 45-cent dividend. The dividend has since been restored at 40 cents, and the company's bond rating was raised to the lowest of the four investment grades for such financial instruments.

But, asserted Mr. Hauspurg, the company's stock is still selling at half of book value and is effectively barred from the equity capital markets.

The rate increase that the company requested would yield a 15 percent return on common equity. The last rate increase granted by the Public Service Commission gave the company a 13.5 percent equity return, and the company disclosed that it had considered cutting the level further.

A spokesman for Consolidated Edison gave this breakdown of the company's estimated $5 billion construction program over the next 10 years:

$1.3 billion for transmission lines, including the upgrading of existing lines and the new construction over the next 10 years. Those expenditures, the company said, as well as redeeming nearly $800 million in bonds over the same period, will require the company to get major financing from the capital markets, which now are closed to it "as a practical matter."

"It is imperative," said Arthur Hauspurg, the utility's president, that "our company improve its earnings and convince the investment community that we have permanently moved out of the crisis which engulfed us in 1974."

Celtics Overtime

By PARTON KEESE

The Celtics tonight's final Boston game to be viewed in overtime. The Celtics, who were leading 95-93, battled in the half when Keith Erickson, their talented forward, twisted his right ankle and went down in a heap. The play continued however until Havlicek tallied 2 more points, and then Erickson limped off to the dressing room, finished for the rest of the game.

With Ricky Sobers leading a second-half comeback, the Celtics pulled within a basket about halfway through the third period. The 6-3 guard had scored 7 points in this quarter, as the Celtics began taking the ball away from Boston fairly easily at their end.

With 3:58 left, the score was tied, 68-68. The Celtics had proved they couldn't run away with it, and the Celtics showed they wouldn't let their lead slip. Now it was up to the defense.

The Celtics pulled back in front and led, 77-72, after three periods. With less than

Glance Is Victor In Sprint

By FRANK LITSKY

PHILADELPHIA, June 4—Harvey Glance of Auburn and Dedy Cooper of San Jose State, two prodigious freshmen, won titles today in the National Collegiate outdoor track and field championships.

On a sunny 72-degree afternoon at Franklin Field, Glance ran away with the 100-meter dash, beating Reggie Jones of Tennessee by two yards in 10.16 seconds. Glance was two yards ahead after 40 yards, and Jones, a world record-holder, could not dent that lead.

Cooper, a high school superstar last year, took the 110-meter high hurdles by a foot in 13.89 seconds. James Owens of the University of California, Los Angeles, a rising star, was second, five-one hundredths of a second behind.

A's Down Yankees, 6-4, On 2-Run Surge in 11th

By MURRAY CHASS

The Oakland A's, who this season have encountered many problems to which they have not been accustomed, ran into another one before the game last night. This one, however, had nothing to do with infrequency of hits or frequency of errors. This one had to do with shirts.

The A's won, 6-4, with a two-run surge in the 11th inning.

The shirt problem which Charles O. Finley created, was solved much more easily than the A's settled the Catfish Hunter situation. Hunter, seeking his fourth straight victory, stymied the A's on two hits until the eighth inning but wound up leaving after nine innings with a 4-4 tie.

The way the A's have been playing this season, they might be willing to settle for ties at times. They are struggling in fifth place and have a flock of hitters who too often don't hit and sometimes fielders who don't field. They have other problems, too.

The A's first problem of the night occurred when manager Chuck Tanner received a telephone call from Finley.

"Wear the green shirts tonight," said Finley the fashion chief, "and save the gold ones for television tomorrow."

The players, though, already were out on the field taking batting practice in their gold shirts. Acting quickly, Tanner called in the team trainer, Joe Romo.

"Have the players change shirts when they come in," Tanner told him. "Charlie wants gold for TV. It looks better."

Paul Mitchell was among the players who made the easy change from gold to green, but getting the Yankees out as the starting pitcher wasn't so easy.

The 25-year-old right-hander, acquired from Baltimore in the Reggie Jackson trade, didn't make it through three innings. The Yankees struck for one run in the second and finished him with a string of four straight singles at the start of the third.

Randolph stole second for his 17th successful steal in 20 tries, but Jim Mason ended the inning with a fly to center.

That, however, was the last out Mitchell got. Mickey Rivers led off the third with a single, and before he had a chance to think about posting his 17th steal, Roy White looped a single to right, sending the speedy Rivers to third.

Thurman Munson followed with another single, tying the game, 2-2, and Chris Chambliss put the Yankees ahead, 3-2, with the fourth straight single.

Stamina of Bold Forbes Seen Key in 1 1/2-Mile Belmont Today

By STEVE CADY

Ten horses will race in the $195,000 Belmont Stakes today, but the "rival" that figures to give favored Bold Forbes the most trouble is Bold Forbes himself.

In a sense, the 108th running of the 1 1/2-mile Belmont comes down to a case of Bold Forbes vs. Bold Forbes. If he can be restrained from running too fast too early, the Puerto Rican-owned colt is expected to win the third and most demanding leg of racing's Triple Crown series.

If the Kentucky Derby winner does what he did in the Preakness, sapping his stamina with a suicidal early pace, the race they call the "Test of the Champion" could go to one of his less-talented 3-year-old rivals.

"If he can get the distance," a Bold Forbes backer said, "he'll hammer these characters into the ground. And it doesn't look like there's anything that can run with him early."

The prospect of an early speed duel faded somewhat yesterday when Greentree Stable's Charleston was withdrawn from the race, trimming the field to 10. Charleston, an early-speed specialist, was scratched after returning from a bruise on his left foreleg. Bold Forbes, owned by Esteban Rodriguez Tizol of San Juan, remained as a 7-5 favorite on the overnight line. However, the Kentucky-bred colt was expected to go to the post at shorter odds than that.

Heavy action both at Belmont Park and in the city's off-track betting shops figured to make Bold Forbes an odds-on choice. Despite his Kentucky heritage, the colt is a national hero in Puerto Rico, where he won his first five races last year as a 2-year-old.

With clear weather predicted today, management was looking for a crowd of about 55,000 at Belmont for New York's most prestigious race. The record attendance of 82,694 was set in 1971 when Canonero II, another colt with a Latin background, failed in his bid to sweep the Triple Crown.

No Triple Crown winner is possible this year, of course, because Bold Forbes finished third, back of Elucutionist and Play the Red in the Preakness. Elucutionist has been knocked out of action by an injury, and Honest Pleasure, the beaten favorite in both the Derby and Preakness, has headed for greener pastures in California.

Play the Red, an Elmendorf colt trained by John Campo, remains to test Bold Forbes again today. Except for Play the Red, no horse in the field other than Bold Forbes has earned as much as $50,000 this year. And play the Red's 1976 bankroll stands at only $56,400, much of it from his second-place Preakness finish.

In contrast, Bold Forbes has earned $218,590 this season, $381,639 over all in a career that shows 11 firsts,

Ron Turcotte Remembers Secretariat

The small package was with his mail in the Belmont Park jockeys' room. Ron Turcotte tore off the brown-paper wrapping and inside the gray cardboard box was a gift from an admirer—a painted wooden carving about 12 inches high of a jockey in blue and white silks.

"This is nice," he said. "I'll take this home."

Ron Turcotte will be wearing the black and red silks of Orme Wilson on Aeronaut, a 20-to-1 shot, in the 108th Belmont Stakes today, but in the minds of many people, as the wooden carving indicated, he always will be wearing the blue and white silks of the Meadow Stable that he wore as Secretariat's jockey. It is only three years since Secretariat won the Triple Crown but already a sense of history surrounds the memory.

In the Belmont Park paddock is a bronze statue of Secretariat at a gallop. And now, on the closed circuit TV set in the jockeys' room, a videotape was being shown of Secretariat's victory against which every Belmont Stakes will be measured. Ron Turcotte glanced up, said, "Let's watch this," and stared at the screen as if hypnotized. The 33-year-old jockey didn't say another word until he and Secretariat had finished 21 lengths in front.

"I'll always remember that ride," he said.

"When did you know that you had it won?"

"After the Preakness," he said. "I just crossed my fingers that nothing would happen. He was in such tremendous shape, I knew he would win the Belmont if nothing happened. But a horse can always take a bad step, or he can get kicked by another horse in the parade. I kept him away from other horses in the parade."

"A Good Horse Knows"

At a mile and one-half, the Belmont Stakes is known as the Test of a Champion.

"He seemed to know he had to go a mile and a half," Ron Turcotte was saying now. "He seemed sluggish going to the post, like he was saving himself. But at the time I was worried. I thought, 'Oh, my goodness, what's the matter?' I tapped a few times and he reacted like, 'What are you doing, knocking the flies off.' He had me worried, but when the bell rang he was all horse. He knew he was in a classic race. Good horses know. The atmosphere is different. The big crowd, all the cameras, the music. Especially the music. They start prancing to the music. You ask the most riders, they will tell you that a good horse knows it's a different race."

Ron Turcotte remembered how Secretariat's trainer, Lucien Laurin, had shown faith in his judgment at the Kentucky Derby.

"One of the biggest pressure points for a jockey is satisfying the owner and the trainer," the jockey said. "But in the paddock at the Derby that day, Mr. Laurin asked me, 'Do you really think he can go a mile and a quarter?' And I told him, 'Yes, but he hasn't proved it to me.' I also told him this horse was a typical Bold Ruler, that this horse doesn't fight you, that you can do anything you want with this horse. I told him, 'I don't want to push him, let him relax and gallop along.' Mr. Laurin told me, 'You ride him to the best of your knowledge, you won't be second-guessed.' He gave me confidence. Instead of making me tense, he made me relax. If he puts pressure on me, God knows what happens."

Pressure is everywhere for a jockey—pressure from being small, pressure from making weight, pressure from the danger, pressure from having to win. That pressure has been more obvious than usual in recent weeks. Mike Hole committed suicide. Braulio Baeza disappeared for several days.

"They both surprised me," Ron Turcotte said. "Mike was a loner, but he had a lot of self-confidence. He always talked positive, he always was looking for the future. He had a big farm in Maryland and he was building a sports car. The night before, he asked me how he could get the motor of his sports car to kick over because he was waiting for the gas tank to arrive. I told him to put the gas pipe into a gallon tank, that's all. He was all enthused. But the next day they found him. And when Braulio disappeared, I couldn't understand it. He's a real family man. I thought he would be the last guy to do that without saying a word."

"He Was So Bold"

Ron Turcotte professes to ignore most of the pressures the jockeys live with.

"I don't have no feeling about my size," he said. "I'm very happy to be this size and do the work I'm doing. I'm proud to be a jockey. I don't eat too much, so I don't have to fight my weight the next day. And the danger, I always look at driving home as being more dangerous. But satisfying the owner and the trainer, that's a pressure point."

What about satisfying the horseplayers?

"In the paddock, I hear them yelling, 'You don't have Secretariat no more, Turcotte,' but that doesn't bother me. I've won close to 3,000 races, but I only won 16 of those with Secretariat."

"If you were blindfolded and put on Secretariat, would you know it was him?"

"Horses are built different," Ron Turcotte said. "Some have wide withers, some have narrow withers. Secretariat didn't have extremely wide withers but he was barrel-chested. And he always started walking very stiff, almost rheumatic. But you could do anything on him, he wasn't afraid of nothing. He was so bold, he'd never shy away. He'd go through a wall of horses. Yes, if you blindfolded me, I'd know I was on Secretariat."

Mets, Falling in East, Go West

By PAUL L. MONTGOMERY

LOS ANGELES, June 4—A little less than four weeks ago, the New York Mets were in first place in the National League East with an 18-9 record and with the usual good starting pitching and defense, and some unusual timely hitting.

That was on May 8. Today, the Mets were in third place, 11 1/2 games behind the Philadelphia Phillies and 15 games behind in the lost column. They have lost 18 of the 24 games they have played since that last brush with first place, and there is no sign of improvement.

As befits a team which has lost 11 of their last 13 and their last 4 in a row, there is a lot of frustration on the Mets. Some of it boiled over last night on the bus bringing the team from the airport to their hotel here after a 2-1 loss to Chicago at Shea Stadium earlier in the day.

Tom Seaver and Joe Torre, the team vets, were kidding one of the Mets' entourage about his off-again, on-again plans to stop drinking. There was good humor and laughter in the back of the bus.

Joe Frazier, the Mets' rookie manager, uneasy after the string of losses and unsteady after the cross-country plane trip, suddenly wheeled in his seat to cut through the banter.

"Our attack ain't that great," Frazier shouted, apparently meaning the Mets had not been hitting enough lately to justify frivolity.

"What's our attack got to do with it," Seaver asked mildly.

Frazier, a blunt speaker, turned to one of his favorites, analogies from the world of golf. "You guys are talking 70 and shooting 80," he said. "And include me in that category." The second statement diminished the impact of the first, and the bus rolled quietly to the hotel.

The Mets open an 11-game road trip against the West Coast teams tonight with a game against the Los Angeles Dodgers. Seaver, having won his first four games of the season and lost his last four, was to pitch against Burt Hooton, who also has a 4-4 record. In his previous nine seasons with the Mets, Seaver has never lost more than four in a row.

There are a variety of reasons for the Mets' slide in

Hit in Ninth Spoils Messersmith Bid

By DEANE MCGOWEN

Andy Messersmith, baseball's second-richest pitcher, lost a no-hitter against Montreal last night when Pepe Mangual whacked a one-out single in the ninth inning.

Still, Messersmith finished with a walk-off victory over the Expos in Jerry Park. It was the season's best effort for the celebrated free agent, who signed with the Atlanta Braves after a controversial spring that included on-again, off-again negotiations with the Yankees, who possess the richest pitcher, Catfish Hunter.

Mangual cracked a ground single to left field on a 1-2 pitch after fouling off two deliveries. The right-hander then fanned Jim Dwyer and Mike Jorgensen, his sixth and seventh strikeouts of the starts. Doug Rader doubled across both San Diego runs in the fourth.

Astros 1, Cubs 0

AT HOUSTON—Despite a two-hitter by Rick Reuschel, the Astros overcame the Cubs on a six-hitter by Mike Cosgrove, who gained his first shutout of the season. Reuschel committed the error that led to Houston's run. Jose Cruz led off the second with an infield single and continued to third when Reuschel's wild throw to first went into right field. One out later, Cruz scored on Enos Cabell's grounder to short. Houston's other hit was a single by Cesar Cedeno in the first.

The Celtics held most of the lead throughout the final period and were ahead, 34-33, when Westall finally got to show that Boston's crowd knew well he had been playing for Phoenix this season. The backcourtman made two foul shots and then stole the ball and scored a layup and a foul shot for a 3-point play and a tie score at 34-34.

Special to The New York Times

DENVER, June 4—A 16-month-old bitch from the East, who was shown for the first time last week, sealed the heights today in the Mile High City as he led a field of 72 Basenjis in the National Specialty. The event was one of the shows being held here under the aegis of the Association for Allied Specialty Shows as part of the Colorado Centennial.

The bitch, Kismet Small Wonder, is owned by Mary Lou Karworthy of Manchester, Pa., and handled by Shirley Chambers.

"There were three shows in Cincinnati last weekend," said Mrs. Chambers, "and she was winner's bitch each day. We knew two of them were 5-point majors but we weren't sure whether the third was 4 or 5 points. To play safe we entered today and it was a 5-point major so she finished with either 19 or 20."

U.S. Seen Heeding Rizzo Troop Request

By JAMES T. WOOTEN
Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, June 4—Federal authorities have all but decided to dispatch armed troops to this city on July 4, informed sources in Washington said today.

But if such order are given, according to information from the Justice Department, the Defense Department and the White House, the number of men deployed would fall far short of the 15,000 requested last week by Mayor Frank L. Rizzo.

The Mayor asked for the troops, he said in a letter to President Ford, because Philadelphia has received threats of violence and disruption aimed at its Bicentennial celebrations that day.

Those observers are expected to attract more than a million visitors to the city, including the President and a gathering of other dignitaries, and Mayor Rizzo has said that the local police would require military assistance for crowd control and security.

Two coalitions planning counterevents that day are protesting against the Mayor's request for troops, arguing that it has a chilling effect on participation in their own celebration that day and denying that they plan anything that would damage or interfere with the official ceremonies.

Extravaganza Planned

Neither the Mayor nor anyone in his administration has disclosed the nature of the threats, but a highly placed source at the Justice Department said today that Mr. Rizzo's "evidence that they were real was quite persuasive."

Philadelphia will be the centerpiece of the nation's 200th anniversary that day, and its schedule of observances will be the climax of its rather substantial role in the American Bicentennial year.

With Independence Hall and the Liberty Bell as the focal points, local officials hope to stage a Fourth of July extravaganza that will not only justify the public interest in the city this year but also the millions of public dollars spent on the plans so far.

There will be scores of bands from across the country, a mammoth parade through the city, and, of course, the traditional Independence Day oration by the President, Gov. Milton J. Shapp, the Mayor and a long parade of other politicians and public officials.

Meanwhile, the July Fourth Coalition and the Rich-Off-Our Back July Fourth Coalition are planning their own form of celebration elsewhere in town, and they say that what they have in mind "will not be in the mainstream."

Only the July Fourth Coalition has been granted a permit by the city for its activities and leaders of the second group have threatened to file suit if their application is not successful.

They have also vowed to go ahead with their plans for a march and rally even if the city does not grant them a permit—a promise that has not gone down well at all at City Hall where the Mayor, a former police officer and commissioner of the local department, has promised that "everybody's going to obey the law on the Fourth of July."

There have been suggestions in various quarters here that Mr. Rizzo, with his reputation as a tough, unyielding foe of public protests, may be exaggerating the possibility of July Fourth disruptions.

That, of course, has been denied at City Hall.

Shapp Supports Request

But the Mayor may also have been prompted to make his request for the troops by suggestions from the local chapter of the Fraternal Order of Police that, because of orderly disputes and other tension with the administration, the officers might stage some sort of work stoppage on the Fourth.

At any rate, Mayor Rizzo formally requested the military presence last week, and yesterday at the suggestion of the White House, city officials met with Governor Shapp in Harrisburg and gained his endorsement of the request.

Today, sources in Washington said that the decision was "99 percent firm," both at the White House and in the Justice Department.

But Federal authorities were said to have balked at the number that Mr. Rizzo had requested.

"They hit the ceiling when they heard about that 15,000," one source disclosed.

In all likelihood, if the troops are dispatched, they will probably be National Guardsmen activated by the President's order; and if the Defense Department follows its usual procedure, the 82d Airborne Division, stationed in Fort Bragg, N.C., would be placed in reserve.

The expected presence of the soldiers was noted today by Tony Auth, the Philadelphia Inquirer's Pulitzer Prize-winning cartoonist. He sketched hundreds of armed troops, many of whom were wearing the "VIP" buttons being distributed to Bicentennial tourists here.

The initials stand for Visitor in Pennsylvania.

'Victimless' Crime?

By TOM BUCKLEY

Gertrude Huston is a book designer and an amiable woman ordinarily, but when her liberal friends start talking about prostitution as a "victimless crime" she finds herself gasping for breath.

"Victimless crime my foot," she exclaimed the other day. "We're the victims." She might think otherwise, she acknowledges, if she lived, as many of her more tolerant friends do, in places like Westport, but it happens that her home and studio are on 30th Street between Park and Lexington Avenues.

"From dusk to dawn there are anywhere from five to 10 prostitutes working the corner of Park Avenue and the block," she said. "They commit every sort, and I mean every sort, of sexual act right out in plain view. In the parking lot across the street, in cars parked at the curb, in the telephone booth at the corner, in the vestibules of the buildings."

Her sleep is regularly broken, Mrs. Huston said, by the shrieks of the women as they battle over a prosperous-looking John, by the shouts of an amorous lout who has just found his wallet gone and by the groans of those bleeding on the sidewalk.

"I've seen everything," she said. "Knifings, beatings, robberies."

An unpleasant irony, as far as Mrs. Huston is concerned, is that one of her neighbors in the row of well-maintained old town houses on the south side of the street is Edward J. Ennis, chairman of the American Civil Liberties Union.

The organization's New York chapter has been in the forefront in defending the rights of prostitutes not to be "harassed" on the street by the police and has announced its opposition to bills under consideration in Albany that would forbid loitering and permit the police to move against prostitutes.

"We've been to the precinct and they tell us their hands are tied," Mrs. Huston said. "They say that, if they catch a cop on the corner with the girls, they'll just go to another corner, and that anyway they haven't got the manpower. What happens now is that the patrol car comes through every so often, the girls hide for five minutes and then they're right back on the streets."

Mr. Ennis, reached at his law office, said that speaking as a private citizen he deplored the situation, but that as the chairman of the A.C.L.U. he would say nothing.

"Our chapters have great autonomy," he said. "The New York chapter has taken a position, and that's it. Personally, I think prostitution ought to be taken off the street."

"It's gotten so that when my wife and I drive up, there are always a couple of girls to open the door for us. They

Hedrick Smith Named Times Chief in Capital

By TOM BUCKLEY

The appointment of Hedrick L. Smith as chief of the Washington Bureau of The New York Times was announced yesterday by A.M. Rosenthal, managing editor.

Mr. Smith, deputy national editor since early 1975, will assume his new duties after the November elections. He will succeed Clifton Daniel, a former managing editor of The Times, who assumed the Washington assignment in 1973. Mr. Daniel, an associate editor, 63 years old, will return to New York later this year at his own request.

Mr. Smith, 42, was Moscow bureau chief of The Times from 1971 to 1974. He won a Pulitzer Prize for international reporting in 1974 and is the author of the best-selling book "The Russians."

After joining The Times in 1962, Mr. Smith was a correspondent in Washington, Saigon and Cairo. He is a 1955 graduate of Williams College, where he was Phi Beta Kappa, and was also a Fulbright Scholar at Oxford and a Nieman Fellow at Harvard in 1969-70.

Bridge: A False-San Can Be Prey

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

Some of the happiest moments for defenders occur when they lull a declarer into a sense of false security. A good example is the diagramed deal, which was played last month in a regional championship in Montreal. Administering the anesthetic were Joel Friedberg of West Hempstead, L.I., sitting East, and John Guoba of Toronto, sitting West.

Most South players would open with one diamond, but the partnership was using a canapé style in which the shorter suit is bid first. South should certainly have bid four hearts at his second turn: Four clubs was a slam suggestion that was not justified.

The spade jack was led, and declarer won with the ace and led a diamond. When East ducked, South won with the king and crossed to dummy and led another diamond. East put up the ace this time and led the club three, a delicate false card.

Declarer Plays Low

The declarer played low, and West took his king and continued the suit. The position was now this:

NORTH
♥ 1062
♦ J

♠ 864
♥ 10
♦ 16

♠ SK103
♥ Q
♦ 974

♥ AJ7

Declarer led a low diamond, and Guoba smoothly discarded a spade, resisting the temptation to ruff. If West had ruffed, the club jack from dummy and been able to ruff high.

South ruffed in dummy, and felt confident of two things. West could not have the singleton heart queen, he thought, and East had

AZEVEDO WEIGHS BID TO QUIT LISBON RACE

LISBON, June 4 (UPI)—Prime Minister José Pinheiro said today he might withdraw from Portugal's Presidential race because of lack of political support.

Admiral Pinheiro de Azevedo told reporters before leaving on a visit to Aveiro in the north that "it would take almost a miracle to continue in these conditions"—an apparent allusion to the absence of significant backing for his candidacy.

The frontrunner for the June 27 elections is chief of the army, Gen. António Ramalho Eanes, who has the support of all major parties but the Communists.

General Eanes said today in the weekly newspaper O Jornal that he "could not accept the support of the Communist Party" because most Portuguese associate it with "many of the negative aspects of these last two years."

Octavio Pato, a Communist central committee member and Presidential candidate, was interviewed in the same publication, and he accused General Eanes of being supported by "reactionaries."

No Telegram Received

Jack Scobell, editorial director of the Scott Meredith Agency, said yesterday that Mr. Meredith had not yet received any telegram.

"We've always said we are only investigating the letters; we have not said they are either authentic or fraudulent," Mr. Scobell said. "If they are fraudulent, Mr. Nixon has nothing to be concerned about."

He said the agency was checking the veracity of the letters by handwriting analysis and by "some internal evidence in the letters that we are following up."

Copies of Letters Cited

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. June 4 (AP)—Copies of love letters purportedly written by President Nixon were spirited out of the White House even before the originals were mailed, according to an account in The Birmingham News of an interview with an unidentified source.

The source claimed to have had copies of 20 such letters and to have received them a few at a time for safekeeping from a friend who got them from a White House employee.

The source was quoted in the article as having said, "I gave them to the man who gave them to Meredith [Scott Meredith, the literary agent] to make a literary inquiry as to their authenticity. I am upset at what has happened."

$300 Million Shortfall . . .

The Emergency Financial Control Board has reasonably offered city officials one week to respond to a sharply critical staff report on Mayor Beame's new budget and many municipal management practices.

The report itself is clearly not above criticism. It may, in its own words, be "unduly harsh" in blasting long-standing managerial shortcomings that a new team in City Hall is striving to correct. The report may be unrealistic, as well as unreasonable, in demanding that $75 million in new economies for fiscal '77 be put into place before the end of this month.

But it will be difficult to refute the charges of the Control Board's staff that many of the top managers in the city's bureaucracy, especially those in the agencies not directly under the Mayor's control, still have not grasped the seriousness or the implications of the fiscal crisis and continue to operate on a "business as usual" basis.

It is futile to deny the "serious flaws" in a budget that relies heavily on measures which are "not feasible within the foreseeable future" or depend on "extremely unlikely" Federal or state actions, such as assumption by Albany of court costs before the end of the next fiscal year. Similar doubts about the new budget already have been expressed in Washington and Albany, and even by some city officials.

To insure that the city will achieve its mandated goal of a balanced budget by mid-1978, the Control Board's staff report recommends that the Beame administration be ordered to prepare $150 million in substitute cuts for fiscal '77 and an additional $150 million in economies for fiscal '78. Those reductions are to be instituted during the closing months of fiscal '77 to insure that they are in place and working for the last crucial year of the three-year financial plan.

That demand appears to us to be reasonable, indeed minimal. It represents a proper response to a potential shortfall for fiscal '77 alone that has been estimated by the Municipal Assistance Corporation to run as high as $300 million and to a record to date of serious slippage in many of the economies dictated by the emergency.

. . . $12.5 Billion Challenge

In a provocative aside, the staff report of the Emergency Financial Control Board calls on New Yorkers to look at their budgetary problems in a more positive perspective.

Although public attention has been focused almost exclusively, and traumatically, on the $821 million to be cut from the municipal budget over the next two years, the report points out that New York still has $12.5 billion to spend next year, the equivalent of $1,500 for every citizen.

"By national standards, this is a tremendous amount of money," the report comments, "and presents a huge opportunity for service."

The challenge to municipal government is to set priorities and reorganize management so that New York's still substantial assets can be used more effectively and efficiently for the benefit of its citizens. City Hall is still short of that goal.

Anti-Cancer Compromise

After five years of legislative impasse, an agreement is taking shape that promises at last to produce a law controlling the sale of toxic substances. The compromise worked out between Representatives Eckhardt of Texas and Broyhill of North Carolina comes none too soon. Some 60 to 90 percent of cancer is now authoritatively attributed to environmental factors. The exact proportion of that total that is caused by hazardous chemicals—rather than smoking, for example—is not known, but the Department of Health, Education and Welfare reports that of the 30,000 chemicals now on the market, a great many are toxic to some degree and an appalling 1,500 have been shown to have carcinogenic effects on animals.

While the Senate has several times passed bills to curb this possibly lethal infection of the environment, the House has always been deadlocked on the question of compulsory testing before a chemical product could be marketed. Until a few days ago, the chemical industry had always been able to convince a sufficient number of Representatives that pre-market testing would be too expensive and time-consuming to stand as a workable solution.

The heart of the Eckhardt-Broyhill compromise is that the Environmental Protection Agency, while still denied the right to prevent, on its own authority, the marketing of a given chemical, could order preliminary testing in cases of doubt and, when appropriate, get a Federal court to consider an immediate ban on its sale.

More important, the E.P.A. would be empowered to act in the case of chemical products already in commercial use and believed to be hazardous; it could, without court action, order tests or stop production outright. With this power, comparable to that already exercised by government agencies in the case of pesticides and food additives, the E.P.A. might long since have arrested the despoiling of the Hudson River with PCB's.

The Eckhardt-Broyhill agreement, which has the support of the Manufacturing Chemists Association, offers the first real hope that government will be able to deal with a problem of great and growing urgency. Like all compromises, it is vulnerable, subject to attack by both manufacturers and environmentalists.

With political conventions and an expected early fall adjournment, Congress has only an estimated 35 legislative days left in which to nurse the agreement into a successful bill, ready for the President's signature.

Or would Congress perhaps prefer to do it the easy way—and order the Surgeon-General to proclaim eating, drinking and breathing a hazard to the public health?

Busing Politics

While the Justice Department flare-up on school busing has been extinguished by Attorney General Edward H. Levi's proper decision not to intervene on behalf of one of the groups appealing the Boston busing order, the race issue has nevertheless been injected into President Ford's election campaign.

After long consideration—accompanied by a great deal of public advice and attention—the Attorney General decided not to take the extraordinary step of urging the Supreme Court to hear the appeal of a Boston parents' group from the "second phase" integration order entered by Federal District Judge W. Arthur Garrity. Mr. Levi's decision was correct because the appeal would surely have been taken—however mistakenly—as acquiescence by the Department of Justice in the violent resistance to the Court's order. Moreover, no matter how carefully worded the Justice Department brief, it would have been seen as support for the proposition that the district court was shifting pupils capriciously rather than as a consequence of an explicit finding of unconstitutional discrimination against black schoolchildren.

Throughout the Justice Department's time of decision, the President has been playing a strange but predictable game. His first response to published reports of the Justice Department's intention to intervene, according to Senator Edward Brooke of Massachusetts, was to allege that Mr. Levi's deliberation in the matter was news to him. Later, a spokesman announced that the notion of intervening in a busing case had been his all along and that the Attorney General was just following instructions. Finally, when Mr. Levi declined to intervene on this case, Mr. Ford announced that he had directed Justice to undertake an "active" search for some other case by which to achieve his purpose.

The President's behavior was strange in its inconsistency but predictable because he has rarely been supportive of the court's orders in the Boston case and because he has careened to the right on a variety of issues in his contest with Ronald Reagan for the Republican nomination. He has made busing a high national priority in this political year despite evidence from Pontiac, Mich.; Prince George County, Md.; and Charlotte-Mecklenburg, N. C., that initial busing difficulties can be overcome with sound planning and firm leadership.

Now that he has seized the issue and has engaged Mr. Reagan in it, the President has initiated a dual charade. The first is that he is drafting legislation to cut back the busing remedy. That problem has been litigated thoroughly in the Federal courts and has been considered time after time in the Congress. There is no rational basis to expect that this effort to turn the Constitution upside down will be any more successful than earlier attempts. Second, he is trying to devise a new mechanism for mediating school disputes, even though he has resort to an agency with 12 years of experience in the field—the Community Relations Service under the Attorney General in the Department of Justice.

Race and busing are explosive and divisive issues in American life, and Mr. Ford is scratching at raw sores. Though politicians cannot be expected to abstain from politics in an election year, a President on the hustings has the obligation not to abandon the responsibilities of his office to the expedient demands of his candidacy.

Opportunity in Santiago

Chile's harsh military regime obviously hopes to gain a measure of international respectability by being host to the Sixth General Assembly of the Organization of American States, now under way in Santiago, Mexico is boycotting the sessions to protest Chile's violations of human rights, and other critics of the military rulers had urged Secretary of State Kissinger to do the same.

The agenda in Santiago should, however, provide an opportunity for Secretary Kissinger to join other foreign ministers in publicly deploring widespread violations of civil rights in Chile and other American nations. This chance will come when the Assembly takes up two reports of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, which documents such abuses in O.A.S. member countries.

Debate on the reports should also furnish an opening for the United States to take a strong stand in support of the commission, from which the chairman and three of the six other members recently resigned because of their doubts that O.A.S. governments really desired action in defense of human rights. One who quit was the United States member, Ambassador Robert F. Woodward, a diplomat of long experience in the Americas.

On a Santiago visit last month, Treasury Secretary Simon warned the military junta that continuing United States aid for Chile's economic recovery would depend on progress in restoring political and civil liberties. Democrats in Chile and elsewhere will expect no less from Mr. Kissinger; and the human rights agenda will enable him to make the necessary points without seeming to go out of his way to be offensive to the host government.

The dire need for an activist Human Rights Commission in the Americas has been pointed up not only by evidence of continuing repression in Chile but by the appalling murders in Argentina, within a period of two weeks, of former President Juan José Torres of Bolivia and two prominent Uruguayan political exiles. It is thus commendable that Mr. Kissinger revised an earlier itinerary that included stops in Buenos Aires and Montevideo.

Cuba, Brazil, Haiti, Nicaragua, Paraguay and Uruguay are also reportedly among the governments censured for abuses of human rights in the commission reports. If Secretary Kissinger will use the Santiago forum to condemn these violations unreservedly and to try for an agreement to improve the commission's effectiveness, his visit to Chile could be worth the political risks of being a guest of General Pinochet and his colleagues.

Letters to the Editor

CUNY: A Victim of 'Political Expediency'

To the Editor:
The multiple factors that finally converged in Chancellor Kibbee's decision to close the City University had the inevitable overtones of a Greek tragedy. Month after month both New York City and Albany allowed political expediency to foreclose decision and action, while the university drifted into a state of increasing chaos and demoralization.

At this point, even its reopening cannot assuage the damage done to what was once one of the most respected and prestigious institutions in the country. Even before the closing, there were reports that registration for the fall had suffered a precipitous decline and that some programs would be eliminated and others would be concentrated in one college—which would mean that many untanned faculty would be expendable.

For the thousands of students who have been affected by the uncertainty of deferred exams, grades and graduation, certain pertinent questions demand an answer. How could so many officials, with a clear responsibility to the people of this city, permit this tragic sequence to come about?

For months it was clear to the Mayor, the Governor, the Legislature and the Board of Higher Education that the university could not survive without emergency action. Each of these factions, however, indulged in politics as usual, with the young people of this city the ultimate victims. Political timidity resulted in buck-passing on the imposition of tuition. Drift and vacillation took the place of pragmatic action. And now, the university is closed. The damage done to morale, enrollment, reputation and academic standards is irreparable and incalculable.

Culpability lies in many quarters. The city administration clearly responds to those unions that have more clout than the Professional Staff Congress—which is another way of saying that what Mr. DeLury could achieve for garbage collectors the F.S.C. could not accomplish for Ph.D.'s. The weakness of the professional union revealed with cynical clarity that without political leverage no one listens.

Finally, the State Legislature, no friends of the city to begin with, failed to perceive that what was involved was not merely politics but the desperate needs of thousands of students. They went home for the long weekend.

These factions have failed us all—the students, the faculty and the people of New York City. But the mandate of Mayor Beame's new board members is clear. Tuition must now be imposed for the fall. At the same time, the State Legislature must act immediately to approve Governor Carey's plan for $24 million in extra aid to the university so that the colleges can reopen, the staff can be paid and the students can complete their semester. This is the categorical responsibility of both the city and the state. [Editorial June 3.]

Goldin's Nonsolution

To the Editor:
The trouble with Harrison J. Goldin ("What Bankruptcy Would Do to the City," letter May 29) is that he has a perfect set of arguments about what the city must not do to salvage itself, but no suggestion about what it can do.

The Comptroller is worried lest bankruptcy impede the "cash flow" to the city. But bankruptcy would also place the city into judicial receivership, where there would be a good chance that the fiscal consequences of default would be distributed more equitably than is true now. For example, if the banks were forced to "defer" even 25 per cent of the debt service due from the city each year, about half a billion dollars, that alone would almost solve the city's immediate cash-flow problem.

Beyond this, I would suggest that if the Federal Government does not meet its responsibility to absorb the one billion dollar annual city welfare cost, a burden resulting from a national problem, the city should withhold all Federal taxes. There is precedent for this, as when our forefathers withheld taxes from London to protest that central government's neglect of their interests. Unfortunately, it is rather difficult to imagine Abe Beame and Harrison Goldin in the role of Sam and John Adams.

But could there be a better year for New York to show that it has the same stuff that Boston had just 200 years ago?

To See the Tall Ships

To the Editor:
On July 4, "Operation Sail," what may be a once-in-lifetime congregation of tall sailing ships, will take place in New York harbor and the Hudson River. Undoubtedly a prime location for viewing this spectacle, including the early-evening fireworks display, will, alas, be unavailable for hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers unless some steps are taken now. I am referring to the grandstand window seats in many of the downtown financial district and World Trade Center office buildings which will probably be closed that day since America's 200th birthday—a holiday in non-special years—this year also happens to fall on a Sunday.

Wouldn't it be a grand gesture if many of the concerns in the lower Manhattan area would plan to hold America's birthday parties and open their offices for their staffs and their families on this year's Bicentennial Fourth of July to witness this outstanding event? Employees living in suburbia and their children especially would have something more memorable to recall throughout their lifetimes than just another weekend at the beach.

Toward Safer Buses

To the Editor:
Although I understand and agree with your comments on school bus safety (editorial May 26), I am enraged by the continued appearance of the phrase "investigators are now examining the causes of the accident."

It is not only the states or agencies who should inspect the drivers and buses but also the parents whose children are riding on those buses, and maybe a little input from the students would be in order. MARGE DOMINIC

On Fighting Swine Flu

To the Editor:
The news article "Researchers Find Large Doses of Vitamin C May Damage Gene Material" (May 20) describes observations by a research team in the Cancer Research Center of the University of British Columbia on the mutagenic action of ascorbic acid, metal ions and oxygen, and quotes one of the investigators as suggesting that people should "avoid massive doses of vitamin C." I have advocated the use of vitamin C in amounts of several grams per day to prevent or treat the common cold and other infectious diseases, including influenza, and I think that it may be of importance in relation to the expected epidemic of swine flu that people not be discouraged from making proper use of this valuable substance. The action of ascorbic acid, metal ions and oxygen on nucleic acids and proteins has been known for several years. It leads to inactivation of viruses and contributes to the control of viral diseases by vitamin C. It has been evident that animals have some mechanism to protect their genetic material against this sort of damage. For example, the mouse shows a low mutation rate, even though it manufactures vitamin C in its own cells at a rate corresponding to an intake of nineteen grams of the vitamin per day for a man. It is likely that human beings have the same protective mechanism, and that there is little danger of harmful effects from ingesting the amounts of vitamin C, several grams per day, that most animals synthesize for themselves.

Sheriff: "What do you believe in?" Organizer: "We promote American- ism and we are against niggers, Catholics and Jews."

Sheriff: "I believe in Americanism, but I don't think the rest of your program has anything to do with it and I'm not joining."

Organizer: "Then we will have to run you out of office."

Sheriff: "Oh, no, I'm going to run you out of town the first time you violate the law."

A quick, quiet investigation revealed that the Klan organizer was wanted for a crime elsewhere and he left one step ahead of the sheriff.

Elijah Dominy loved me and every member of my family. I don't doubt that he would have considered it a great achievement and beneficial for all of my family had we been willing to see religion his way and be "born again."

But like all true Baptists, he was a man of profound tolerance as well as a strict separatist. He thought that the church and state were best left in a state of parallel life and wary coexistence.

I suppose that Elijah Dominy was not acquainted with the life of Roger Williams, the founder of Rhode Island and the father of religious toleration in North America.

I know I never heard him mention that Roger Williams was the founder of the Baptist church in the United States. But in his bones he had absorbed the essence of Baptist Christianity, the least established and the most independent of all the Christian sects I lived among during my 44 years in Georgia.

For example, in 1928, when Al Smith was the Democratic candidate, my father, by supporting Smith, a New York Roman Catholic, lost fully half of his Christian friends.

Elijah Dominy, an elected official, espoused the same unpopular candidate. I understand the suspicions that many Northern liberals have of Southern Baptists. They are like the suspicions of the Southern Protestant towards the Catholic, Al Smith.

As with all generalizations, this one falls apart under specific scrutiny. I do not claim that Jimmy Carter knows all the nuances of American pluralism. But on his record, and knowing him, I believe he wants to learn. Nothing that has happened in the months of his Presidential campaign has changed my mind.

Morris B. Abram, a New York lawyer, was chairman of the Moreland Act Commission on Nursing Homes.

I don't want to be in that number, when the 'Saints' go marching in.

By Erica Heller

As a former semi-flower-child, fervent peace marcher and honorable hippie of the sixties, observing the various Presidential hopefuls as they jockey for position is mildly amusing, at best.

And as they each proceed to package and market themselves and become dangerous parodies of one another, it is there that my amusement ends. These men often speak of wanting to tip "the young vote."

Anyone that can do that, I'll not only take my hat off to, I'll go to the moon for. Because I think it will be that difficult. I don't presume to act here as a spokesman for my generation, only to sound the siren of one 24-year-old woman's utter political disillusionment.

I was stung by the Gene McCarthy fever several years ago. McCarthy provided for me (and for many others like me, I suppose) the perfect transition from adolescence to pre-adulthood. From bliss to concern.

We believed in him enough to cut school and go lick envelopes for him at his midtown headquarters, to wake up at 4 A.M. on a frosty February morning and pile all bleary-eyed onto buses to go to New Hampshire and canvass for him.

And Gene McCarthy's ultimate defeat also provided many of us with our first real taste of bitter disappointment. The anti-Vietnam peace marches that I seemed constantly to attend in both New York and Washington are all still very vivid memories for me.

Whole classes at my New York high school would make the midnight run down to Washington to protest the systematic annihilation in Vietnam. And we'd return later that night, exhausted, filthy, stinking of tear gas and feeling ever so virtuous.

And wholly incapable of internalizing our irrelevancy to the entire Vietnam situation, President Johnson finally did convince us though. And, of course President Nixon reaffirmed it. And now, with all of that behind us, we face an election.

Changing Carters In Midstream

By Russell Baker

What Jimmy Carter needs at this crucial stage of his campaign is a new Carter. In fact, there is considerable evidence that he is having one built.

That joke about Jerry Brown's Zen Buddhism the other day and the harsh reference a few weeks ago to Hubert Humphrey as "an old man" could never have come from the old Carter.

And what about the knife-play Detroit's Mayor Coleman Young used in Carter's behalf on the hapless Morris Udall to suggest that Udall, having once been a Mormon, might now be a racist? The old Carter, with his gentle, loving kindness would surely never have let such abuse pass without rebuke.

On the hunch that Carter might be changing Carters in the middle of the campaign, I checked with Campaign Technicians Inc., the political construction company which produced 17 new Richard Nixons between 1953 and 1972.

Lee Jerbil, their brilliant chief of new politician design, insisted that the company had not been approached by Carter and, in fact, was so busy putting finishing touches on its brand new Jerry Brown that it couldn't produce a new Carter before the Democratic convention if it got the contract.

He agreed, however, that Carter was desperately in need of a new Carter. The old Carter with his new face and early Christian manners had "run like Seabiscuit" in early spring, he noted, "but in the past month he's looked more like a six-furlong horse in a 12-furlong race."

In the jargon of political handicappers, Carter has lost his momentum. It isn't surprising. In the old days, it took the public two or three days to get tired of a politician. Jerbil built a new Nixon in 1954 that didn't have to be replaced until 1958.

Nowadays, however, the public's rate of politician consumption is terrifying. A new Presidential candidate is lucky if he lasts longer than a cake of bath soap. The reason for Carter's recent troubles becomes clear once we understand this. Not only is his new face of last February now an old face, but also his new political manner, with its love and kindness for all, is now excessively familiar.

The gentlemanly style delighted the public of March, but the public of May has tired of gentility. Cautious jokes are now made about Carter's Baptist devotions. Carter himself may now sense that the public of late spring is ripe for religious meanness. Thus, the joke about Brown the Buddhist and the attack on Udall the Mormon.

Could Carter possibly have picked up one of the old Nixons in a second-hand store somewhere along the campaign trail? I asked Jerbil. Not a chance, he said. Nixon had each worn-out new Nixon put in a storage vault when it came time to get into a new model. Some day he planned to give them all to charity for a tax deduction.

Could Carter possibly make a new Carter without professional help? Jerbil thought it would be very hard. Jerry Brown had taken the entire factory two years to produce, and they were still putting in modifications when Brown decided to run for President.

The designers gussed in March that by May the voters would be bored with Carter's gentlemanly style. They deliberately built Brown with curt, impatient manners that would appeal to a public eager for something different from Carter's courtly style. When word got around that Brown could even be rude to his father, he became the voting sensation of the late spring season.

What elements ought to go into a new Carter to guarantee him the nomination? Jerbil doesn't give free advice, and so we can only make an amateur's guess. It is clear that the new Carter ought to stop talking about the importance of momentum and start saying that momentum doesn't count any more.

In fact, this is what Carter is now saying. The new Carter should also probably stop crying to be Mr. Christian and start talking like a man who can be rude to his father, or at least to anybody who gets between him and the nomination. In fact, this is what Carter has started to do.

The new Carter should also stop treating professional political bosses like typhoid carriers, and make it clear to them that he can be mighty friendly in the White House to organization men who deliver for him. In fact, this is what Carter has been doing recently, and it has won him alliances with Mayor Beame, Leonard Woodcock and Mayor Young.

Should the new Carter stop promising that he will never lie to us? Dangerous, perhaps. And yet, if he were to say, "Because I can never tell you a lie, I must tell you in all honesty that there may be a time when, as President, I will have to lie to you," he might be politically reborn as the only candidate in the field honest enough to admit to a possible future obligation to lie.

I do not urge such a course, but it would certainly give us a new politician. And new politicians are what we are looking for to lead us.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

in Vietnam, Cambodia and much of black Africa. But its prestige has not yet recovered in the Middle East where it was squeezed out of Egypt and possibly the Persian Gulf.

Moreover, last year's dreadful Soviet grain harvest—35 percent less than planned—was a sharp economic blow forcing huge purchases in hard currency. Thus Moscow had a more difficult time financing its continued growth of military power although the build-up goes on.

And, while the West worries that Communist successes in Italy's elections may pose problems, the Kremlin doesn't seem overjoyed by Western Communism's newly independent mood. It may be discovered by future analysts that fruition of the "crisis of capitalism" long foreseen by Marxist theory actually began to show political results in 1976—and was swiftly followed by a similar "crisis of Communism."

The essential systems of neither the United States nor the Soviet Union have been seriously affected. There has been extensive change in Washington's governing personnel (and more is probably in the offing), while that of Moscow remains in the saddle. But the latter group is sclerotic; Father Time will soon produce change even if it isn't voted by Soviet citizens.

Leonid Brezhnev has survived internal political problems and has clearly reminded his huge army that it is the servant, not master, of the party. He patiently pursues his policy of advancing the U.S.S.R.'s status and trading wherever possible for both technological and commercial advantage. His hawks are on the leash, as President Ford's have been since Secretary of Defense Schlesinger was pushed from office.

There may not be any imminent prospect of the long-delayed new SALT accord, and force reduction talks in this city are probably stuck until after the United States elections. And, strangely enough, the Kremlin may perhaps have a sigh of relief equal to that heard in the White House if a new Congress concedes, perhaps to a new President, that it is more effective in hindering foreign policy than initiating it.

Meanwhile, danger points—far-off China or nearby Yugoslavia and Italy—are regarded with relative calm by most Austrians. They have become accustomed to their new-found ability to survive almost anything that happens to them, taking comfort from pleasant surroundings while doing so.

A Tranquil Eye Of the Storm

By C. L. Sulzberger

VIENNA—Living in Vienna is like living in the basement of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, surrounded by beautiful relics of the past, tranquilized by serenity, and isolated from surrounding pressures.

Austria has managed to fool soothsayers by recovering from amputation of most of its population (Slavs, Magyars and Italians ruled by the Hapsburgs) and most of its territory; then from imposed attachment to Germany, while yet surviving as a nation. It has found new vitality and, although they no longer lord it over non-Teutonic subject peoples, its citizens are better off than ever.

The Austrians are proving themselves shrewd existentialists. They border two great power blocs but happily recall that neutral Switzerland and nonaligned Yugoslavia are also neighbors. Somehow they imagine they can muddle through probable crisis in the latter, after Tito's death, possible crisis in Italy after this month's elections, and rising East-West tension.

Austria's traditions of schiapparei, or charming inefficiency, and gamusli, or charming gaiety, are well-suited to its policy of neutrality in a cruel world. The Austrians figure they can manage to surmount all problems except war—and they reckon there won't be war.

Looking east and west toward the power poles of Moscow and Washington, there is no doubt where Vienna's private sympathies are directed. This is a Western country, by ideology, by culture, by tradition. In its grand days it regarded itself as the bulwark against Eastern threats. But neutrality is not practiced only according to sentiment.

This country places some hope in the growth of a kind of third force on this continent but it recognizes that's a long way off. Meanwhile, without saying so, it wants to see NATO remain sufficiently strong to continue the kind of balance on which Europe is now constructed.

Equality vs. Liberty

By Herbert J. Gans

In America, equality and political freedom are not in conflict—except again for the wealthy, who are now freer than anyone else. Their civil liberties are hardly ever violated, but the poor are regularly denied due process by the police and other agencies. And while every American has the right to influence Government actions, it takes power to be influential, and that power is almost always stronger with higher income.

The rich can sway politicians with campaign contributions, and the United States Supreme Court has just ruled that these contributions are a form of freedom of speech. The poor cannot afford to exercise this freedom, which is why they can rarely even find politicians who will listen to them. More equality would right the balance somewhat, for the higher income that poor people would derive from redistribution measures would add to their power and thus their freedom.

The conservative argument is correct on one point. More equality would increase the power of Government, and it is possible—but by no means as inevitable as conservatives think—that the Government would misuse the extra power to reduce political freedoms. The proper remedy is further checks and balances, particularly by increasing the citizenry's role in, and power over, Government through additional political participation.

Although people will not vote more regularly until they feel they have a real stake in government, they should be enabled to register more easily; they should be helped, and even subsidized to organize lobbying groups to exert influence on politicians; and their opinions should be communicated through more extensive opinion polling.

Stepped-up political participation would, of course, help to equalize people's opportunity to exert political influence, and add to their de facto political liberty. At the same time, however, democratic government would also become less efficient, because the more people who exert influence, the harder it will be for politicians to reach agreement on a decision. Some conservatives argue, therefore, that further citizen participation could endanger democracy, either because decisions would remain unmade, or because politicians might, in desperation, avoid the democratic process when no one is looking in order to make it easier for them to reach agreement.

This argument is unduly pessimistic. The democratic process has been continuously updated since 1776, when America was a small, agrarian society, and it can be updated again to make democracy work under conditions of wider citizen involvement.

2D DEMOTION BID SURVIVED BY HAYS

Prominent House Democrats Delayed in Bid to Strip Him of Another Post

By RICHARD D. LYONS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 4 — House Democrats negotiated further disciplinary action today against Representative Wayne L. Hays of Ohio, but one attempt to strip him quickly of a second committee chairmanship failed.

Several prominent Democrats, including Representative Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. of Massachusetts, the majority leader, and Representative John Brademas of Indiana, the chief deputy whip, sought to call an emergency meeting of the House Democratic Caucus to put to a vote Mr. Hays's continued chairmanship of the House Administration Committee.

They contended that Mr. Hays was a political liability to the party, especially in an election year, and that they had the votes to oust him. But they were dissuaded by the counterargument that, as one member put it, "It smacked of a lynch party."

O'Neill Is Determined

Mr. O'Neill, who is in line to succeed Carl Albert as Speaker and is seeking to demonstrate his authority, is determined to further demote Mr. Hays and intends to do so when the caucus holds its regular meeting on June 16.

In the wake of the Capitol Hill sex scandal involving him and Elizabeth Ray, Mr. Hays temporarily stepped aside yesterday as chairman of the Democratic National Congressional Committee, which distributes campaign funds to members running for re-election.

The use of the word "temporary" by Mr. Hays angered many of his colleagues who reiterated that they wanted him ousted, permanently and quickly, from both the campaign and Administration committees.

"We want to prevent Hays from putting down the gavel one day and picking it up again anytime he pleases," one high-ranking Democrat said. "We want to end Hays's control of the payroll, the books, the records and the audits."

Argument of Allies

Allies of Mr. Hays, who returned to his farm in Ohio today, have countered that he is dependent upon "might" to do something to himself. This argument was presented to Mr. O'Neill by Representative Philip Burton of California, the chairman of the House Democratic Caucus, and Representative Neal Smith, Democrat of Iowa.

But Mr. O'Neill persisted in his demand for Mr. Hays's permanent resignation, saying of the meeting with Mr. Burton and Mr. Smith, "I laid the cards on the table."

Mr. O'Neill said he expected Mr. Hays to resign his Administration Committee chairmanship after next Tuesday's primary election in Ohio, probably the next day, when the committee is due to meet.

The Campaign Committee also is due to meet that day, as is the ethics committee, whose official title is the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct. The ethics panel has begun an investigation into Miss Ray's charge that Mr. Hays padded the payroll of the Administration Committee by billing her to do no work. Mr. Hays has denied the charges but has admitted having had an affair with Miss Ray.

Compromise Sought

Mr. Hays and his allies have been seeking a compromise under which, pending the outcome of the investigations by the ethics committee and the Justice Department of Mr. Hays's actions, he would be temporarily replaced as chairman of the two committees.

Under this compromise, Representative Thomas E. Morgan, a Pennsylvania Democrat who has announced his retirement at the end of this year, would replace Mr. Hays as Campaign Committee chairman, and Representative John H. Dent, also a Pennsylvania Democrat, would take Mr. Hays's place as chairman of the Administration Committee.

Ford Says the Hays Case Disturbs Him and Nation

WASHINGTON, June 4 (AP)—President Ford said today that he and the nation were disturbed by the possible misuse of taxpayers' money when Representative Wayne L. Hays, Democrat of Ohio, put Mr. Hays's paramour, Elizabeth Ray, on the House payroll. Mr. Ford said he warned the House five years ago that such a scandal might happen.

Mr. Ford, interviewed on KFMB-TV of San Diego, said, "The problem is the utilization of taxpayers' money for the admitted situation. That, I think, is what disturbs the American people a great deal. It disturbs me."

Mr. Ford added that as a Representative of Michigan, he warned on the House floor that if the chamber as a whole relinquished authority over staff salaries to Mr. Hays's committee, the House would regain that authority only if there was a scandal.

spun humor and for composing a song for almost every occasion, has written a new one, but he declined to reveal the lyrics.

"I had hoped to regale my colleagues, but right now I don't feel it's appropriate," Mr. Hays said. "It's one thing to be in trouble here in the House and another thing to have a grand jury investigation going on. Somebody could go to jail. I hope a brighter day is coming."

Representative Forney H. Stark, a California Democrat, put in this morning's Congressional Record a letter from an Oakland constituent noting that Congress was considering legislation to produce a fleet of B-1 bombers at a cost of $32 billion.

Instead, the constituent suggested that Congress appropriate roughly $15 million "to provide each of its 435 members with the same service Ms. Ray provided." He explained:

"Then Congressmen, being otherwise pleasantly diverted and having blunted their aggressive edge, would reject the $32 billion bomber bill. The result: at a cost of $15 million, taxpayers would save $91,985,000,000. Moral: make love, not war."

Some representatives, concerned about their own reelection chances this fall and mindful of polls showing that most voters have a low opinion of Congress to begin with, do not find much humor about the matter back home.

For example, Representative Romano L. Mazzoli, a Kentucky Democrat who was the first member to call publicly for Mr. Hays's resignation, said he had held a news conference back home to talk about the importance of the new Congressional budget process.

"However," he said, "the first question the press asked me was 'How many more members of Congress have mistresses on their staff?'"

Mr. Mazzoli replied that to his knowledge the answer was none but he added: "This shows the depth of the problem."

Also, a newspaper in the district of Representative Jim Lloyd, a freshman Democrat of California who narrowly won election two years ago, printed a charge from his Republican opponent. The opponent, Louis Brutocan, noting that Mr. Lloyd had received funds from the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, also headed by Mr. Hays, said, "You can add Jim Lloyd's name to the list of Washington mercenaries bought and paid for by Representative Wayne Hays."

The article did not mention that several days earlier Mr. Lloyd was one of the representatives who asked the House ethics committee to investigate the Hays matter.

Just before the House adjourned Wednesday evening, a wire service printer in the Speaker's lobby reported a Chicago Tribune article saying that Miss Ray had reportedly told Federal agents that she had tape-recorded meetings with 13 representatives and two senators in her apartment bedroom. Subsequently, Miss Ray denied the existence of any such tape recordings.

Word of the story spread quickly to the House. Fear nearby and representatives abandoned the debate on a foreign military aid bill to man of the Administration Committee.

But Mr. Dent is outranked in seniority on the committee by Representative Frank Thompson Jr., a New Jersey Democrat, who is a bitter political enemy of Mr. Hays. Mr. Thompson is an ally of Mr. O'Neill and other members of the Democratic leadership who want Mr. Thompson to take over as committee chairman.

There is fear on the part of some representatives that the records of the Administration Committee contain enough information to damage seriously their reputations, and they do not want Mr. Hays to have the opportunity to use the information against them in retaliation.

Such information may involve evidence of payroll padding and double vouchers for travel expenses. Earlier this year a dozen representatives were named as having falsely sought repayment for official trips that they had not taken, or having billed for both airplane and auto expenses for the same trip. Some of the money has been repaid.

With this in mind, Speaker Albert today named a special three-man committee to investigate the methods by which the travel and payroll records are kept.

Mr. Albert said his intent was "to study ways to rationalize the accounts systems" in order "to assure both propriety and the appearance of propriety in the administration of House accounts."

Representative David R. Obey, the Wisconsin Democrat who was appointed chairman of the investigative panel, said the group would meet Monday to plan its action.

EX-GOV. BABCOCK SPARED JAIL TERM

Judge Orders Montanan to Pay Fine in Nixon Fund Case

WASHINGTON, June 4 (AP)—A Federal district judge ruled today that former Gov. Tim M. Babcock of Montana will not have to serve a four-month jail term for hiding the identity of the donor of $54,000 to former President Richard M. Nixon's 1972 campaign. However, a $1,000 fine against him was upheld.

In setting aside the jail sentence, Judge George L. Harr Jr. noted that the real donor, Armand Hammer, an industrialist, had received probation after pleading guilty to contributing the money under fictitious names.

In another political contributions case, a former assistant comptroller of the Gulf Oil Corporation, was indicted on charges of lying to a Federal grand jury.

William C. Vigil, 70 years old, now retired in Tulsa, Okla., was charged with lying when he told a grand jury he never had brought into the country cash above the $5,000 limit without reporting the money as required by customs rules.

According to the indictment, thousands of dollars were contributed by Gulf to various political candidates. It said that much of the money was passed through a bank in the Bahamas and was brought into the country by Mr. Vigil. He allegedly delivered the money to another senior Gulf official in Pittsburgh.

Gulf's former Washington lobbyist, Claude C. Wilde, faces criminal trial soon for his part in making illegal political contributions.

In the Babcock case, Judge Harr said that he originally had sentenced the former Governor to jail to "serve as a deterrent to others not to ignore the law."

But now, the judge added, "since the principal in the case was put on probation, it would be a terrible miscarriage of justice to send the agent, the legman, to jail in that circumstance."

Mr. Babcock, a Republican, who was Governor of Montana from 1962 to 1969, pleaded guilty Dec. 10, 1974, to concealing the identity of Mr. Hammer, who is chief executive officer of the Occidental Petroleum Corporation, and listing five persons, including himself, as the donors. The other four persons were not prosecuted.

At the time, Mr. Babcock, 56, was a vice president in Occidental's Washington office.

On Jan. 31, 1975, Judge Hart sentenced the former Governor to a maximum one-year jail term, but suspended all except four months of it. He also fined Mr. Babcock $1,000.

Mr. Hammer, 77, was fined the maximum $3,000 and was put on a year's probation last March in Los Angeles. Federal District Judge Lawrence T. Lydick said that he spared Mr. Hammer a prison term because of his age and poor health. He has been hospitalized with heart disease since January.

Photos of Corning Residents Bedeck New 'People Wall'

By FRANK J. FRIAL Special to The New York Times

CORNING, N. Y., June 4—Amory Houghton Jr. is on the wall. So is Jim Sheaffer, Charlie McGrady is up there, along with Karen Murphy and Joanne Winters, who are both in uniform. Over there is Al Moses and, just beyond, Joe and Eleanor Nasser.

The wall is the People Wall, which will be unveiled and dedicated tomorrow in the new City Hall here. It is a vast permanent mural of life-sized photographs, all in color, of a cross-section of the people who live and work in Corning.

The pictures cover some 2,000 square feet of the wall. An additional 1,000 square feet will be displayed in a few months and, eventually, the mural will cover some 5,000 square feet.

It will stretch the full length of the building and, in some places, will reach more than two stories in height, all of it behind the glass facade at the front of the modern limestone building.

Erwitl Was Photographer

All the photographs were done by Elliott Erwitl, a prominent New York City photographer.

Amory Houghton Jr. is the chairman of the Corning Glass Works. People in Corning grow restless when someone says "company town," but when talk turns to the glass works, and Karen Murphy and Joanne Winters are police officers, as their uniforms denote.

Mr. Moses, also in uniform, is obviously a local Boy Scout official, and Joe and Eleanor Nasser are the Mayor and his wife. The People Wall also includes a newly married couple, some disc jockeys, lots of children, a reporter for the Corning newspaper, a fireman, a mailman, a jogger and a table player.

Mural Called 'Appropriate'

"It seemed appropriate that City Hall should be filled with citizens at all times," Mr. Erwitl said, "particularly since the interior of the new building is visible from the exterior public area. Also, I liked the idea of a permanent reference point to 1976."

The unveiling of the People Wall will be the highlight of the dedication of the city's new civic center. The center, which will be named for Mayor Nasser, includes a new library and a skating rink that can be used as an outdoor theater and a meeting area.

"It's all a little embarrassing," the white-haired Mr. Nasser, Corning's Mayor for 17 years, said yesterday. "But the aldermen came to me and said, 'Who else would we name it for?'"

The civic center itself is but a part of an all-encompassing urban renewal program for this Southern Tier city of about 15,000 people some 230 miles northwest of New York City.

Urban Renewal Began in '69

Corning's urban renewal program got going in 1969 with modest applications for about $2 million in Federal aid. That amount was amended to about $7 million. Then, in 1972, floods spurred by Hurricane Agnes devastated the city and prompted the state and Federal Governments to add another $30 million to the urban renewal plan.

"We moved along slowly at first," said Mayor Nasser, "convincing people that we needed renewal. Then the flood hit us. If two housekeepers, since her husband's death in 1964. A former business associate of Mr. Dreyfus said, "They were lovely people, just lovely." He added: "Victoria spent weekdays in Bronxville and weekends in Brewster, as they had before Max died. She traveled little and entertained her close friends and enjoyed watching baseball on television until the end."

Max Dreyfus came to the United States from Germany just before the turn of the century with his brother, Louis. Max played piano for a music publisher, augmenting his income with nightclub work, and later helped publicize many of the nation's best-known composers.

Madrey Farm, 60 miles from Tin Pan Alley, was his haven. It had been the earlier retreat of Daniel Drew, a cattleman, banker and speculator, as well as of Patrick Ryan, a contractor who built the Manhattan and Hellgate Bridges.

Mrs. Dreyfus became famous as a breeder of Percheron draft horses, although they were moved to other quarters when Mr. Dreyfus converted the main barn at Madrey into an expansive but still rustic lodge a few hundred yards from the main house.

Once more than 1,000 acres in size, the estate has been trimmed back over the years in a manner typical of exurbia, but it has remained isolated enough for seclusion.

The main house, a 12-room structure with a tower, is probably too small to accommodate an institutional purpose.

Large estates have been donated, in some cases, to educational or corporate in-situations for purposes of training, study or "retreats." In most cases, however, the property is sold for individual homes on lots of one to three acres or for clusters of condominiums.

The carefully manicured grounds of Madrey are still punctuated with statuary, each piece now tagged with a number identifying it in the catalogue. The works are likely to find new homes on smaller estates, which may also be forced to retreat some day before increasing taxes and advancing population.

Part of the Max Dreyfus estate in Brewster, N. Y., which will be auctioned off next week.

International

The United States yesterday lost its fight to keep the Palestine Liberation Organization out of the 132-nation World Employment Conference in Geneva. The governing body of the International Labor Organization, which had decided by the margin of one vote last Saturday to bar the P.L.O. from the conference, reversed itself under pressure from the League of Arab States, the Organization of African Unity and the Soviet bloc. Despite the rebuff, the American delegates decided not to walk out, but they will boycott sessions in which the P.L.O. participates. [Page 1, Column 4.]

South Africa, which has been ostracized in the West for several years because of its apartheid policies, warmly welcomed the coming meeting between Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and Prime Minister John Vorster. The state-owned South African radio said that the meeting would be "in itself, apart from the outcome, a historic occasion." [6:4-5.]

National

The unemployment rate in May was the lowest for any month since December 1974, the Labor Department said. The rate declined to 7.5 percent after holding steady at 7.5 percent in the two preceding months. The total number of people holding jobs also increased substantially, rising by 300,000 to a record 87.7 million. The department also had encouraging news about the inflation rate. The index of wholesale prices rose by three-tenths of 1 percent in May and wholesale prices of industrial commodities, which are regarded as the most accurate measure of underlying inflationary pressures, rose by only one-tenth of 1 percent. [1:7-8.]

Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, the country's largest brokerage concern, agreed to settle two antidiscrimination suits by paying $1.3 million to persons it had allegedly wrongfully failed to hire or promote and by establishing a $1.3 million employment plan, under which specified percentages of women and minority-group members will be hired. [1:7-8.]

Although he had been severely reprimanded last March for accepting hospitality from a major defense contractor, Dr. Malcolm R. Currie, a 3-star-ranking Pentagon official, has been put in charge of the development and acquisition of all weapons by the Defense Department. He had been director of defense research and engineering, supervising the development of all weapons. In an unannounced promotion, he was recently made "acquisition executive" with the responsibility for the procurement as well as the development of new weapons. [1:5.]

President Ford said that the antibusing legislation he plans to send to Congress would require that every future court case ordering busing be reopened every three years to decide whether court jurisdiction could be lifted. He said that the court would have to give up its jurisdiction "unless it was affirmatively found that there had been no correction of the unconstitutional abuses" of desegregation laws. He also said that Attorney General Edward H. Levi had been asked to determine whether the proposed legislation would apply retroactively. [1:2-3.]

Metropolitan

In their most heated confrontation over New York City's fiscal crisis, Governor Carey told an angry and resistant Mayor Beame to increase his austerity measures sharply in the coming year, with more than $200 million in additional and accelerated cuts. Mr. Beame said the Governor's proposal was unnecessary and impossible. [1:1.]

A State Supreme Court jury has ordered CBS to pay more than $250,000 to a Manhattan restaurant because the network's television camera crew, on a story about health code violations in restaurants, entered without permission and took pictures. The restaurant was Le Mistral at 14 East 52d Street. A lawyer for CBS said the verdict was a threat to all reporters seeking information on private property, but Justice Martin B. Stecher said that "the right to publish does not include the right to enter upon or trespass upon the property of these plaintiffs." [1:1-2.]

Quinlans Will Use Payment for Story To Buy Memorial

The family of Karen Anne Quinlan said yesterday that arrangements had been made to channel the proceeds from the sale of their story to the Diocese of Paterson to establish a memorial in a health-care facility for their comatose daughter.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph T. Quinlan of Landing and Lenore Hershey, the editor of The Ladies Home Journal, have confirmed that the family has sold exclusive story rights to the magazine for an undisclosed amount. Sources close to the business arrangement said the magazine would pay "approximately" $30,000.

The Rev. Thomas Trapasso, pastor of Our Lady of the Lake Roman Catholic Church in Mount Arlington, who is an advisor to the Quinlan family, said the Quinlans would like to establish a "hospice" in an existing health-care facility for terminally ill patients.

Father Trapasso said the hospice concept was relatively new and it envisioned an area where terminally ill patients can live out their days with enough medical care to make them comfortable and with their families free to visit them at almost any hour.

"We can't think in terms of constructing anything because we won't raise that kind of money. The family would like to see a few rooms set aside in an existing facility as a fitting memorial, but we can't even say that this will be done for sure."

Miss Quinlan has been in an irreversible coma for more than 13 months.

Paul W. Armstrong, the Quinlan's lawyer, said the family had hoped the matter would remain private until arrangements for the facility had been completed. However, reports about the magazine arrangement forced disclosure of the memorial plans.

on Nadjari Staff They Too May Quit

by MARCIA CHAMBERS

Lawyers on the widespread corruption staff have within the justice system can only undermine the effectiveness of this office."

The lawyers wrote Mr. Lefkowitz they were motivated by a "strong moral obligation to the people of this city to insure that the office will continue to perform its functions with integrity and independence, as it has in the past. We know you share this concern."

Mr. Lefkowitz's office declined comment, but it is known that the Attorney General has problems with the Governor's proposal for a second prosecutor, partly because of the legal disputes it would undoubtedly create over which prosecutor would have the authority to do what.

The 30 lawyers, including bureau chiefs and deputy bureau chiefs, sent a copy of their letter to Governor Carey with a covering letter that said his plan would result in "jurisdictional disputes, administrative confusion, and disruption of investigations."

They did not address themselves to another option Mr. Lefkowitz is considering. That is, allowing Mr. Nadjari to continue to handle corruption indictments and investigations, already under way, but requiring him to turn over new cases to New York City's five District Attorneys.

The five district attorneys believe they should have concurrent authority in prosecuting corruption in the criminal justice system. The Knapp Commission, in its report on police corruption, had indicated that the District Attorneys then in office had not handled the problem effectively and it recommended the setting up of the special prosecutor's office.

Mr. Nadjari's staff was also preparing new subpoenas yesterday for the records of Mr. Cunningham's law firm, which had been sought since January.

On Thursday the Appellate Division of State Supreme Court for the First Department ruled that the law firm had to turn over only those records relating to its transactions with a bank.

Mr. Nadjari had sought all the firm's records for the last four years, a request that the court said amounted to a "license to ransack" Mr. Cunningham's files.

The court also said that a showing had to be made that the records were relevant for Mr. Nadjari's investigation, and yesterday Mr. Nadjari's aides were attempting to word the subpoenas to show the importance of these records.

"We were three days late," Captain Hibbert told a gathering of airline officials and airport personnel here, who were supposed to be the main attraction at the ceremony, but we didn't make it."

Instead, the 51-year-old airline pilot recreated the first air-mail run from Tascoc, Wash., to Boise, Idaho, by taking off from Tascoc shortly after 6 A.M. on April 6 with 9,265 pieces of mail. A similar flight had been made on April 6, 1925.

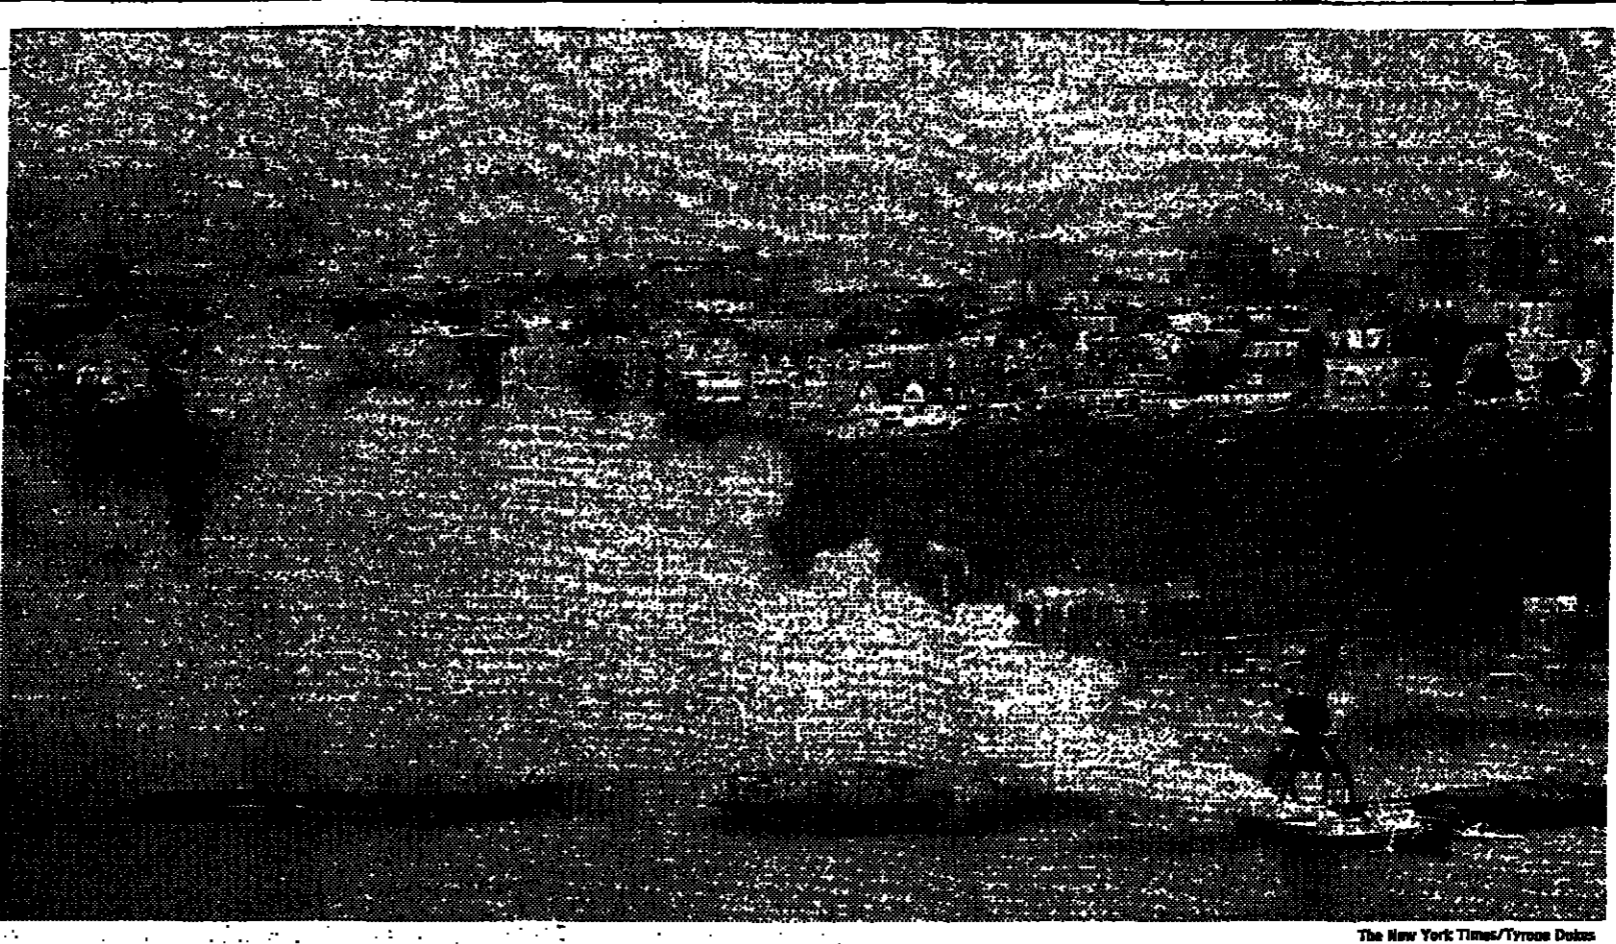

Since the April 6 flight, Captain Hibbert, who has been a pilot for 35 years and has been given a leave from his regular flying duties for United, has made stops at a score of old air-mail drops across the country and will continue to do so for 23 cities as a part of United Airlines Golden Anniversary celebrations.

Rider Is Shot Dead on IND in 'Village' After Argument as 35 Witness Crime

By ROBERT D. McFADDEN

As dozens of horrified riders looked on, a 33-year-old Brooklyn man was shot to death aboard a subway train in Greenwich Village early yesterday after an exchange of insulting remarks with his alleged killer, a visitor from Yugoslavia who then waited gun-in-hand on a station platform for the police.

The shooting—the third homicide of the year on the city subways, compared with 17 in all of 1975—occurred before about 35 witnesses on a southbound IND line "F" train as it pulled into the West Fourth Street station at 1:10 A.M.

The victim, tentatively identified as Henry Belton, a building maintenance employee who lived at 2102 Beverly Road in the Flatbush section, was fatally wounded by four shots in the chest, three of them fired at point-blank range, witnesses told the police.

The suspect, Mehmed Hakanjin, a 21-year-old Yugoslav visitor with a work permit, allegedly killed Mr. Belton with a .38-caliber Beretta, a seven-shot automatic pistol he had concealed under his jacket, after a brief exchange of remarks that included "Shut up," "You're a chump" and "go back to your own country."

Suspect Waits for Police

As Mr. Belton slumped to the floor of the first car of a four-car train, the gunman was said to have stepped onto the station platform and waited while other passengers ran to summon help. No policeman was on board the train, but Transit Patrolman Arthur Jensen, who was on duty in the station, arrested the suspect without incident.

Mr. Hakanjin, who gave his address as 4710 Fort Hamilton Parkway in the Borough Park section of Brooklyn and said he was a part-time waiter at Mamma Leone's Ristorante at 239 West 48th Street, was turned over to the city police and booked on charges of homicide and illegal possession of a weapon.

Witnesses told transit and city police that Mr. Belton and a male companion had boarded the train at 34th Street and that Mr. Belton had got into a brief argument with an unidentified rider over a seat.

Mr. Hakanjin, who was with two male companions, was not involved in the argument, at first, according to several witnesses; but was said to have told the participants to "shut up."

Mr. Belton was said to have scoffed, told Mr. Hakanjin the dispute was none of his business and, apparently taking note of his foreign accent, suggested that he "go back to your own country."

One witness said Mr. Hakanjin replied: "You want me to make you [shut up]?"

"You go right ahead—you're a chump," Mr. Belton was said to have responded.

At this point, according to a number of witnesses, Mr. Hakanjin stood up, pulled a black pistol from under his jacket and shot Mr. Belton in the chest three times. The victim fell to the floor just as the train was halting at the West Fourth Street station.

As the car doors opened, Mr. Hakanjin was said to have stood in the doorway and fired a fourth bullet into the prone victim.

"Now you'll shut up," he said before stepping out of the train, according to the witnesses.

The companions of both the suspect and the victim were said to have fled the scene, but Mr. Hakanjin waited near the train for the officer who arrested him. Mr. Belton was pronounced dead at the scene by a physician from St. Vincent's Hospital.

A Transit Authority spokesman listed two previous apparent homicides on the subway system this year as that of a youth decapitated by a pillar at Delancy Street on May 4 while frolicking with a group of boys and that of an 80-year-old man fatally injured in an attempted mugging when he tumbled down entrance stairs at 42d Street and Eighth Avenue on April 16.

CURBS ON BEACHES RISE AFTER BLAST

5 Miles of Rockaway Shore Closed to Swimmers as Health Tests Go On

By FRANAY GUPTA

New York City yesterday closed off till next week five miles of beaches in Queens as a precaution against contamination from sludge that exploded out of two sewage storage tanks in neighboring Nassau County on Wednesday night.

The beaches are in the Rockaway section, from the Nassau border to Beach 109th Street. They will be closed to swimmers, but not to sunbathers, until at least next Tuesday, according to Dr. Lowell E. Bellin, the city's Commissioner of Health.

Dr. Bellin said officials from his agency were sampling waters off the beaches every 30 minutes in an effort to determine the pollution and contamination levels. The results of these tests will not be available until next Tuesday, he said.

Meanwhile, 63 beaches in Nassau, including the popular Long Beach, and Atlantic, Hewlett, Lido and Point Lookout Beaches, continued to be shut down yesterday.

The Nassau police continued their search for Robert Creech, Nicholas of 44 Suffolk Road in Island Park. The 16-year-old youth was apparently killed in the explosion, which caused 1.3 million gallons of sludge to flow onto dozens of beaches in the area.

The explosion destroyed two steel sewage storage tanks on Pearsalls Haddock, a tiny island off the South Shore of Long Island near the Queens border. Mr. Nicholas was reportedly fishing in the vicinity with a companion, Rickey Will, 14 of 50 Suffolk Road, Island Park.

Rescue by Nassau Officials

Rickey was rescued by two Nassau officials who pulled him out of the sludge. He was reported in fair condition at the Nassau County Medical Center in East Meadow, although his hearing was said to have been temporarily affected by the explosion.

The Nassau police said they had not determined the cause of the explosion, which shook houses as far as three miles away.

But Sgt. Kevin Finn of the Nassau Public Safety Squad said that the police were checking reports that the two boys were tossing firecrackers near the sewage tanks on Wednesday night.

Other investigators noted yesterday that the setting off of firecrackers or even the presence of lighted cigarettes could ignite the methane gas discharged by treated sewage. However, they said they were puzzled as to why the fall-safe mechanisms in the tanks apparently did not function.

Meanwhile, residents in the blast area were advised to have themselves inoculated against tetanus, typhoid and diphtheria.

Mrs. Grasso Vetoes Marijuana Bill

Gov. Ella T. Grasso of Connecticut yesterday vetoed a bill that would have lowered the maximum penalty for possession of marijuana to three months in jail and a $250 fine. The Governor contended that the General Assembly had failed in not providing for one penalty for those carrying large quantities and another, lighter penalty, for those with small quantities. The existing law provides for penalties from one year and a $1,000 fine for persons caught the first time with less than four ounces of marijuana to 10 years and a $5,000 fine for second offenders with four ounces or more.

2 Bus Concerns Receive Subsidies

The Westchester County Executive, Alfred B. DeBello, announced that the county would grant a subsidy of $37,000 a month until Jan. 1, 1977, to Liberty Coach and Westchester Street Transportation Company. These two bus companies have agreed to operate the Westchester Coach Company and the Port Chester-White Plains Bus Line. Drivers of Westchester Coach, which serves 4,000 daily, went on strike May 28 because the county had withheld its subsidy, due to the company's faulty bookkeeping procedures, for three months, and the drivers could not be paid. Service was restored June 1 when the county agreed to pay a partial subsidy of $29,000.

From the Police Blotter:

A 17-year-old Brooklyn youth was arrested and charged with the murder of two grocery clerks in their store at 510 Chauncey Street, in the Bushwick section, on May 26. The police identified the suspect as Charles Campbell of 502 Marion Street. The youth allegedly shot the clerks, Julio Mendez, 33, of 449 Atkins Avenue, and Gilbert Rivera, 30, of 425 Marion Street, during a holdup attempt. Junior High School 252, on Lenox Road and East 94th Street, in the Crown Heights section of Brooklyn, was robbed of more than 20 musical instruments and uniforms belonging to its marching band. A number of typewriters also were stolen by the burglars, who forced a window. A 16-year-old youth was arrested in connection with the robbery. A 31-year-old Brooklyn man was robbed of $175 and shot in the left leg by two youths armed with a zip gun on a service road of Shore Parkway between Rockaway Boulevard and Pennsylvania Avenue in the Canarsie section. The victim was Edward Watkiewicz of 174 Wyckoff Avenue.

U.S. and Local Housing Aides Together on TV but Not in Mind

By JOSEPH P. FRIED

An unusual attempt was made yesterday to use closed-circuit television to bring together Federal and local officials and civil-rights activists on the issue of subsidized housing in New York City's suburbs.

The attempt succeeded technologically. Philosophically, the participants appeared far apart after the cameras had stopped as they had been before.

This was true of the issue generally and of a specific dispute involving the Town of Hempstead on Long Island, which is refusing to build 75 units of low-income housing, 50 of them in middle-class neighborhoods, as a condition of getting Federal funds for other housing and community development purposes.

Despite the continuing division after yesterday's three-hour television session—which involved participants in all localities in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut—an official of the sponsoring group, the nonprofit Metropolitan Regional Council, felt that the session had been worthwhile.

"This is the very first time that all these actors [in the Hempstead dispute] have met together," said the official, Mary P. Harris, who moderated the session. "Despite the unresolved differences after the television meeting, she said, 'I felt we brought the two sides closer together than they were.'"

Cunningham Pleads To L.I. Driving Charge

Special to The New York Times

MINEOLA, L.I., June 4 — Patrick J. Cunningham, the Democratic state chairman, pleaded not guilty in District Court here today to a charge of driving "while impaired by alcohol." The plea was entered by his lawyer, Michael Stafford.

Mr. Stafford, an aide to State Senator John Dunne of Garden City, a Republican, gave Judge Donald E. Bellin an affidavit stating that Mr. Cunningham wanted to plead not guilty. He explained that Mr. Cunningham was not in court because he had "business" in New York City.

11 Places Linked by TV

The Metropolitan Regional Council seeks to develop better communications among local government officials in the three-state New York metropolitan region. It operates a closed-circuit television system that links 11 places, including New York City, Newark, Jersey City, White Plains, Mineola, L.I., and Stamford, Conn.

The session on low-rent housing in the suburbs came as part of the continuing debate over trends involving the migration of middle-class whites from central cities and the sharp increase in many cities of poor minorities.

In New York City, for example, the white population declined by more than 600,000 between 1970 and 1975 and the Bronx developed a majority black and Puerto Rican population, according to a New York Times analysis of a Census Bureau study done for the city's Housing and Development Administration.

3d Ave. Fiesta Recalls a Puerto Rican Tradition

Workers preparing booths along Third Avenue at 109th Street for Fiestas Patronales del Barrio

By DAVID VIDAL

Marta Lorenzi has lived in East Harlem for 53 years. Yesterday the 74-year-old Puerto Rican woman said that she had never before seen anything similar to what she was witnessing in El Barrio.

For the first time, a major cultural festival, called Fiestas Patronales del Barrio, opened in the community along the two westerly lanes of Third Avenue between 106th and 116th Streets.

"It is very pretty that they should recall things about our country," she said, adding that she had long been active in other types of community affairs.

At a playground at 109th Street and Third Avenue last night, a man in white shoes, beige slacks and a white T-shirt danced alone under a basketball rim. A mother bounced her young daughter in her arms. A young couple and their two sons strolled in the crowd. Sneakers, boots and sandals crisscrossed the asphalt to a Latin rhythm as the band played on.

On the stage, a band called Adalberto y Los Kimbos sent its "salsa" sound over the heads of the crowd—which was growing into the hundreds—onto the Third Avenue, tenements, where neighbors peered out of windows decorated with Puerto Rican flags to listen.

A Tradition Recalled

The festival, which recalls a tradition of island towns to honor their patron saints in a fiesta, is to last 10 days. There will be more open-air shows with famous Latin and other artists, dance presentations and art exhibits, as well as the sale of typical foods in street kiosks.

The fiesta was organized by a nonprofit agency called the East Harlem Community Corporation, a group that seeks to stimulate the area's economic development.

The event coincides with a weekend explosion of activity surrounding the observance of Puerto Rico Week in the state and the city.

A gala ball and banquet preceding tomorrow's 18th Annual Puerto Rican Day Parade was held last night at the Americana Hotel, an event that in all likelihood represents the largest single joint gathering of island and local community figures.

Today another gathering to honor the mayors of Puerto Rico's 78 towns and cities, most of whom come to the city for the annual get-together, is being held in the Bronx. Tomorrow, the massive parade, which draws hundreds of thousands of Puerto Ricans every year, will march up Fifth Avenue starting at 1 P.M. from 44th to 86th Street, with the reviewing stand set up at 68th Street.

This year's parade is dedicated to the well-known singer and composer Bobby Capo and is to include the usual array of dignitaries, such as Gov. Rafael Hernandez Colon of Puerto Rico.

It is to go up Third Avenue to join the other fiestas, an event dedicated to Mayor Carlos Romero Barcelo of San Juan, P.R. He is the chief political rival of the Governor and a contender for his post in November elections.

"This is cultural," stressed Luis Sotomayor, one of the fiesta organizers, who stressed that proceeds were to go to area rehabilitation efforts.

On the sidewalks, in the park and along the street last night, neighbors and vendors mingled in the pleasant breeze. A cloth Puerto Rican flag was selling for a dollar and a plastic one for half that price.

Venezuelan oil workers at a Lake Maracaibo refinery. In first labor negotiations since nationalization of oil industry, workers are demanding higher pay and fewer hours.

Venezuela Oil Crews Ask Raise

By JUAN DE ONIS Special to The New York Times CARACAS, Venezuela — The oil workers of Venezuela's nationalized petroleum industry have presented strong demands for higher pay and fewer hours to their new employer, the state. In the first labor contract negotiations since the nationalization on Jan. 1 ended the management role of 18 foreign oil companies, the marine petroleum workers' union, which handles tankers in Lake Maracaibo's key terminal area, has asked for a 30 percent wage increase and a reduction of the workweek to 36 hours from 40. The 30,000 workers represented by more than a dozen unions in the oil industry negotiations are Venezuela's labor elite. Their contracts with the foreign companies provided the highest pay and the best family benefits, vacations and housing aid. The political importance of the oil unions contracts goes beyond the petroleum industry itself. The wage-and-benefit pattern in this key industry extends to all other contracts, including those to be negotiated soon between the Government and state workers such as teachers. This contract, covering 100,000 education workers, will set wages and benefits in its sector for three years and will strongly influence budget spending over this period. The Minister of Finance, Hector Hurtado, has announced in Congress that he intends to keep federal spending next year at this year's $8 billion level as part of an effort to control inflation. As employees of the state oil industry now, the oil workers are pressing for a larger share of the increased income being earned from higher world oil prices and the nationalization of the concessions. But for Petroven, the state holding company that oversees the nationalized companies—owned formerly by Exxon, Shell and Gulf, among others—the issue is profits and efficient operations. Gen. Rafael Alforzo Revard, Petroven's president, Continued on Page 36, Column 2

Deficit of Soviet Trade Widened During Quarter

MOSCOW, June 4 (UPI)—The Soviet Union reported today that its huge trade deficit with the West widened again in the first quarter of 1976, led by a doubling of imports from the United States. The figures showed a continued worsening of the Soviet Union's trade picture, which last year resulted in the biggest deficit in two decades. Foreign Trade magazine said the January-to-March deficit with capitalist industrial countries stood at $1.7 billion. The figure is 20 percent higher than the corresponding period in 1975, when imports exceeded exports to the West by $1.4 billion. "This confirms the unfavorable trend which we saw last year," said one Western economic specialist. By far the largest increase in imports came from the United States. Imports from the United States in the January-to-March period were $781.5 million, up from $340 million in 1975. Exports to the United States actually shrank in the first quarter to $304 million from $38.6 million. Although the Soviet figures gave no specific breakdown of type of import and export, United States officials said two-thirds of the imports from the United States were wheat and corn purchased in the wheat harvest of last year's disastrous grain harvest. The figures do not reflect new 1976 purchases because Soviet trade figures account only for actual movement of goods and not sales deals. The other third of the imports from the United States was heavy machinery, the officials said. The large Soviet trade deficit probably has continued into the second quarter—March through June—because the Soviet Union recently has been a heavy buyer of additional foodstuffs, such as corn from the United States and soybeans from Brazil. Yesterday it was disclosed that the Russians had also been buying large amounts of frozen broilers, partly in Europe and partly in the United States. The heavy buying of foodstuffs abroad resulted from a disastrous harvest last fall mainly because of a drought condition. Reports indicate that the Russians have been forced to do some replanting of this year's crops because of bad weather conditions, but it is too early to determine harvest results. However, many observers do not expect the Soviet Union to need so much imported food next year as it has bought so far this year.

Senate Backs Study Of Antitrust Laws

WASHINGTON, June 4 (AP)—The Senate voted today to create an 18-member commission to study and recommend revisions in the nation's antitrust laws. The commission proposal, adopted by 73 to 0, came as an amendment to a controversial antitrust bill. The amendment, offered by Senator Jacob K. Javits, provides for a two-year study of the antitrust laws and their effect on prices, employment, economic growth, foreign trade, concentration of economic power, profits, investment and other areas of the economy. The New York Republican said many persons were concerned about whether the antitrust laws reflected current economic realities. He added that judges had complained for years about the confusion in the present laws. He said that the bill now before the Senate would alter the substance of existing antitrust laws, but would only give the Govern-

S.E.C. to Require Data on Boycotts Affecting Business

WASHINGTON, June 4—The Securities and Exchange Commission, responding to an inquiry by Representative Bella S. Abzug, Democrat of Manhattan, has formally enunciated a policy requiring disclosure of any material effect on a company's business that might arise from participation in an economic boycott such as that imposed by Arab countries against Israel. Mr. Abzug made public today the reply of the S.E.C.'s chairman, Roderick M. Hills, who stated, "In the situation which you posit—that is, where corporate participation in a boycott has a material adverse effect upon the income, assets (including good-will) or profits of the corporation—disclosure of the relevant facts is mandatory." The Hills letter represents no change in S.E.C. policy, according to Richard H. Rowe, head of the commission's division of

U.S. SEEKS TO SPLIT OIL POOLING COSTS

Officials Sound Out Industry on Creating a Reserve to Ease Taxpayer Load By EDWARD COWAN Special to The New York Times WASHINGTON, June 4—Moving cautiously, the Government has begun sounding out the oil industry on relieving the taxpayers of part of the cost of the strategic petroleum reserve authorized by Congress in December. The Federal Energy Administration said it was thinking about using authority granted by Congress to require oil refiners and importers to create an industrial reserve of crude oil and refined products of up to 186 million barrels. A barrel holds 42 gallons. Such a pool for use in an emergency, such as a new embargo by oil exporters, would represent roughly $2.5 billion of extra inventory. How that would affect the industry's finances generally—and exploration in particular—are two of the questions the energy agency wants oil companies to address. Agency Requests Comments In a notice published Thursday in the Federal Register, the agency invited comments by July 16 and scheduled a public hearing for July 19 and 20. "I expect it will be one long poverty plea from guys in $300 suits," an official said. Nevertheless, he added, the agency's experience with regulation showed that Washington invariably failed to anticipate all problems and that industry usually found difficulties, unforeseen effects and ambiguities in even the most carefully considered regulatory proposals. Officials stressed that the energy agency was not formally proposing an industrial reserve, at least now. However, they acknowledged that the agency believed the idea had more apparent merits than drawbacks. The most obvious advantage is that oil companies and their customers would pay part of the cost of buying and storing the nation's strategic reserve. Congress in the 1975 Energy Policy and Conservation Act required creation of an early reserve of 150 million barrels by the end of 1978 and authorized a billion-barrel reserve in the 1980's. Storage Is Under Study Officials say that up to one-third of the early reserve could be oil bought and owned by refiners and importers. Whether they should store it in Government-owned cisterns or in their own steel tanks is another question under study. Officials plainly incline toward pooled storage in Federal cisterns, or salt domes. They say it will be less costly and avoid having to send inspectors with dip sticks around the country checking individual companies' tanks. Conceivably, a pooled-storage arrangement could be entirely Government-run, including purchase of the oil, with costs Continued on Page 36, Column 4

Mr. Miessl, who heads the Chicago bank's international department, was in Brazil on a tour of Latin-American branches. Citibank Increases Prime Rate to 7 1/4 %

Other Big Banks Follow Quickly in Response to Action by Fed

The cost of credit moved up yesterday for corporate borrowers. A quarter-point increase in the prime lending rate to 7 1/4 percent from 7 percent, was announced by a group of major banks in response to the Federal Reserve Board's recent efforts to curtail growth in the nation's money supply. The increase was initiated by Citibank, New York's largest lending institution, and was quickly followed by the Chase Manhattan Bank, the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Company, the Irving Trust Company, the Chemical Bank, the Bankers Trust Company and institutions in Philadelphia, Detroit, Chicago and other cities across the country. The prime rate is the basic lending charge on loans to the biggest and most creditworthy corporate borrowers. Virtually all other lending rates are scaled upward from the prime,

DOW IS DOWN 9.90 IN LOAN RATE RISE

Average Closes at 963.90, Lowest in 3 Months, on Action by Banks

The stock market, reacting to higher loan charges announced by major banks, fell sharply yesterday, the Dow Jones industrial average dropping 9.90 points to close at 963.90, its lowest level in more than three months. Tape watchers agreed that yesterday's decline could be traced almost entirely to the announcement at the opening that Citicorp, the nation's No. 2 bank after the Bank of America, was raising its prime rate to 7 1/4 percent from 7 percent. Other major New York and out-of-town banks did likewise. The Dow opened at 971.27, down 2.33. It was down as much as 10.23 at 3:30 P.M. Its close was the lowest since Feb. 18, when it wound up at 960.08. Volume for the day slipped to 15.96 million shares from 18.9 million shares Thursday. Investor Fears Noted Commenting on yesterday's trading, Charles Jensen, chief technical analyst for Merkin & Company, said: "Fear, rather than optimism, has become the driving force in the present investment policy of many large investors. The large increase in business loans focused attention on higher interest rates. In addition, the liquidity problem is developing as many traders are fully invested and there are a number of large offerings forthcoming." Leon G. Cooperman, chairman of investment policy at Goldman, Sachs & Company, said there was "obviously concern over the rising level of short-term rates, particularly with this second consecutive weekly increase in the prime." He noted that there was also concern with a possible slowing of the economy. "That slowing in May retail sales was due to more than bad weather and it created fears of escalating inflation," he added. In yesterday's trading, declines outnumbered advances by almost 3 to 1, as 1,009 issues fell and 372 posted advances. Nineteen stocks hit 1976 highs and 62 lows. The most active issue of the day was Alcan Aluminum, which fell 2 to close at 25 1/4 on a turnover of 291,400 shares. Continued on Page 37, Column 4

Satellite Traffic Is Shifted By RCA to Better Service

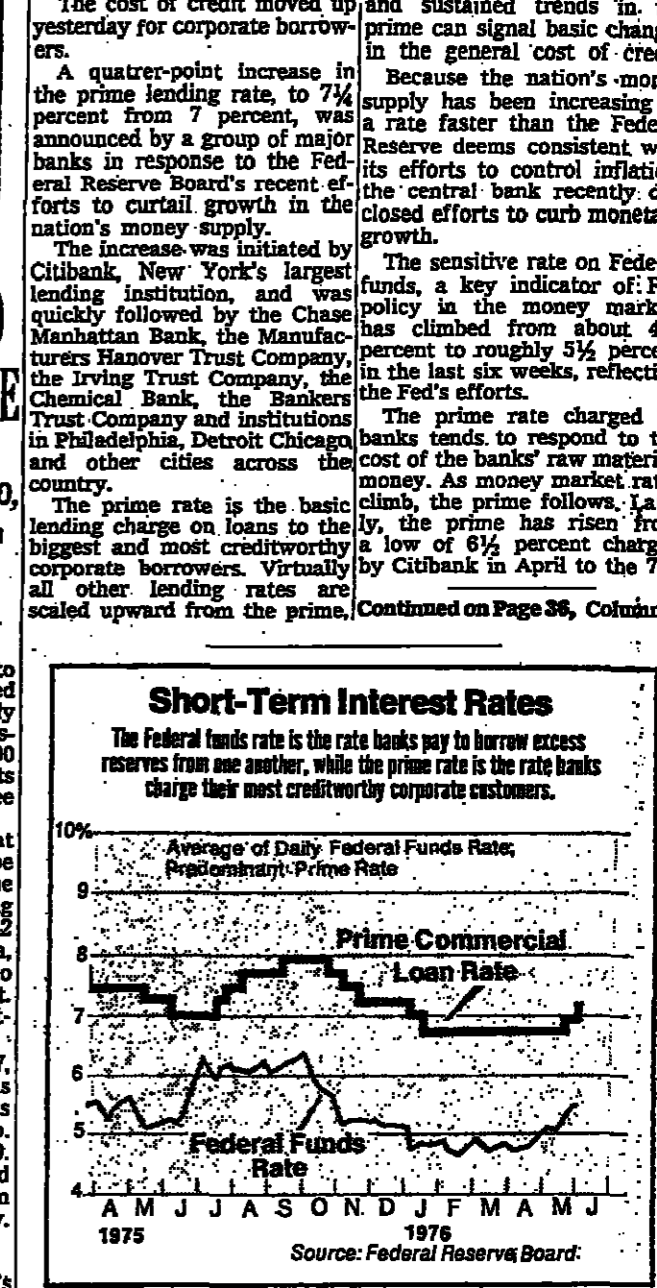

By VICTOR E. McELHENY The RCA Corporation announced yesterday that it had shifted traffic, as planned, from the first of its two domestic communications satellites to the second on Wednesday, and that it would move the "backup" craft westward next week. The exchange between the two craft, in virtually stationary orbits 22,300 miles above the Pacific was performed to improve communications with places at the extreme ends of the broad area covered by the craft's antennas in western Alaska, Puerto Rico and the East Coast of the United States. The RCA Satcom I craft, launched last December and now the backup satellite, started commercial service late in February and took over long-distance traffic between Alaska and the lower 48 states late in March. In a maneuver next Tuesday or Wednesday, an RCA spokesman said, Satcom I will be drifting westward from the op-

Swiss Buy Dollars; Pound Rises a Little

LONDON, June 4 (AP)—The dollar gained today on the recently rising Swiss franc for the second consecutive day, and the ailing British pound staged a small recovery from yesterday's record low. Dealers said mass buying of dollars by the Swiss central bank, aimed at keeping Switzerland from pricing itself out of export markets, was partly responsible for halting the Swiss franc's strong two-week advance. The dollar closed in Zurich at 2.4535 Swiss francs, up from 2.4045 yesterday and 2.3885 Wednesday. But it was still below its mid-May level of more than 2.51 Swiss francs. The Economist, the British weekly predicted the dollar would replace the West German mark as the world's strongest currency. It said, "For the rest of the 1970's there seems to be both the capacity and the productivity potential for an American economic miracle." In London the pound climbed from its cellar level of $1.7080 at yesterday's close to $1.7165, Continued on Page 37, Column 2

U.S. Honors Creator of the 'Peanuts' Strip

Charles M. Schulz, creator of the "Peanuts" comic strip, has received the Secretary of Commerce Medal for his contributions to public understanding of the American economy. The cartoonist provided illustrations of characters from his comic strip—Charlie Brown, Lucy, and Snoopy—for the booklet, "The American Economic System and Your Part in It," which was produced jointly by the Advertising Council and the Commerce Department in cooperation with the Department of Labor. At a reception honoring Mr. Schulz in the Bank of America Building in San Francisco Thursday, Secretary of Commerce Elliot L. Richardson said that Mr. Schulz's contributions to the booklet "went a long way in brightening up the presentation of what is often termed the dismal science of economics." Following a special meeting of the board of directors of the Bulova Watch Company yesterday, Harry B. Henshel, chairman of the company, announced that R. Mark Bourquin, who was executive vice president, had been elected president. In addition, he announced that C. P. Wong, managing director of the Stelux Manufacturing Company, had been elected chairman of the executive committee and chief executive officer. Market Place 330 Big Board Stocks Pay Over 9%

By VARTANIG G. VARTIAN

In fact, dividend returns on a large number of New York Stock Exchange issues have climbed to lofty levels.

An analysis by the Interactive Data Corporation, a computer time-sharing concern that specializes in financial data, shows that 330 common and preferred issues out of a total Big Board listing of 2,122 stocks—now yield better than 9 percent.

The 9 percent return, incidentally, is about the same as the current yield on double-A utility bonds.

"Personally, I was amazed to find so many stocks yielding 10 percent or better," said John D. LaMothe, manager of product development at Interactive Data, which is based in Waltham, Mass.

There were 98 issues with a year's cash return of at least 10 percent. These yields were computed by dividing the indicated annual dividend over the next 12 months by the closing price last Wednesday. Where no actual trade occurred for an issue that day, the bid price at the market close was used.

It should be noted, however, that a high yield alone does not signify a sound commitment for the income-oriented investor.

Furthermore, blue-chip issues are conspicuously absent in the list of highest-yielding stocks.

The top yielder—bearing a return of 16.67 percent—was North American Mortgage Investors, a real estate investment trust that closed Wednesday at 6 and carries an indicated annual dividend of $1 a share.

On Wall Street, a sugar stock analyst pointed out that both companies increased their dividend payout sharply after earnings skyrocketed in 1974, reflecting the surge in sugar prices.

At the American Stock Exchange, the two highest yielding issues were common stocks, Realty Refund Trust, a REIT, topped the list with an indicated yield of 14.10 percent. The next highest return was in Pato Consolidated Gold Dredging, with an indicated yield of 13.33 percent.

A total of 19 Amex stocks showed returns of above 10 percent.

relative stability during the last year. Two out of every three stocks yielding 10 percent or more are electric utilities.

"Utility stocks generally have fallen in price during recent weeks because of the competitive investment pressures of rising yields in fixed-income securities," A. Eager Bryant 3d, utility analyst at Reynolds Securities, noted.

Some of the highest yields in utilities, as provided by the Interactive Data computer printout, show up in medium-quality companies.

The current recommendations of Mr. Bryant for investors seeking utility common stocks are Carolina Power and Light, yielding 8.4 percent; Potomac Electric Power, 9.7 percent; and Public Service of Colorado, 8.7 percent.

The computer printout shows yields of well over 10 percent in various preferred issues of such electric utilities as Jersey Central Power and Light, Consumers Electric, Pennsylvania Power and Public Service Electric and Gas.

The top-yielding utility issue is the 13 percent cumulative N preferred of Long Island Lighting, its indicated annual yield for the next 12 months came to 12.01 percent.

He noted that additional support for the economic recovery was expected from consumer spending and suggested that any new demonstrating success in the struggle against inflation should improve the consumer confidence level.

Mr. Balatos of Manufacturers Hanover said: "Consumers continue to be highly sensitive to inflation, so I feel that this report is terribly encouraging."

Both he and Mr. Ormer suggested that the return to a moderate rate of increase in wholesale prices in May indicated that the sharp rise in April might have been an aberration, although they did not rule out further volatility in coming months.

Outlining the price report before the Joint Economic Committee of Congress, Janet L. Norwood, acting labor statistics commissioner, said there was no indication that wholesale prices would climb drastically.

She said that May's 0.3 percent overall increase included declines in most of the anticipated rise for raw materials and that there was nothing to indicate a "size-denied explosion" in future prices.

Four of the 13 major industrial groups in the wholesale index declined between April and May, led by a fall of 0.5 percent in the category of lumber and eggs climbed sharply for the second consecutive month.

Commodity Levels In May the Wholesale Price Index for all commodities, before seasonal adjustments, stood at 181.8, up 5 percent from a year before.

The industrial commodities index for May was up 5.3 percent from the year-earlier level, while farm product prices were 4.4 percent higher and processed foods and feeds were 0.5 percent higher.

Western Electric to Lift Prices By 3% on Bell System Supplies

The financially troubled Western Electric Company, the telephone equipment supply subsidiary of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, announced yesterday a 3 percent increase in the price of all products sold to the Bell System.

Western Electric's earnings were down 69.5 percent in 1976's first quarter from the year-earlier level as revenues fell to $1.5 billion from $1.6 billion.

In other pricing developments, the Gulf Oil Corporation raised its gasoline prices 1 cent a gallon for all grades.

Texaco Inc. announced an increase of slightly more than half a cent a gallon on all grades of tractor and diesel fuels, No. 1 and No. 2 heating oils and kerosene. The increase is applicable to the resale and distributor classes of trade and effective in mid-continent and western marketing areas.

Increases of 1 cent a gallon were announced by the Exxon Corporation on Thursday and by Texaco last week.

Monsanto Polymers and Petrochemicals, an operating unit of the Monsanto Company, will increase the price of acrylonitrile to 26 1/2 cents a pound from 25 cents, effective July 1.

ply for their share of the back-pay pool. In such cases, the allegedly discriminatory action must have taken place on or after Oct. 20, 1972.

Merrill Lynch agreed to decrease its maternity leave policies as part of the settlement of the suits.

For women, the hiring goal for account executives will be 10 percent the first year, and will rise by two percentage points each year until it reaches 18 percent in the fifth year.

For blacks, the hiring goal for each of the five years will be 3.5 percent and for Spanish-surnamed persons 2.6 percent.

Somewhat lower levels of hiring of blacks and Spanish-surnamed persons would be permitted in the first year, but any shortfall would have to be made up by the end of the five-year period.

For jobs other than account executives, both women and minorities would have to be hired according to a formula based on the extent to which they have previously been underrepresented on the Merrill Lynch payroll.

In announcing the settlement of the Merrill Lynch suits, Abner W. Sibal, the general counsel of the E.E.O.C., said that he was "optimistic that the decision will have a constructive impact" on other companies in the securities industry.

That "have yet to institute affirmative measures toward compliance with equal employment opportunity law."

He described Merrill Lynch's decision to agree to a settlement of the case as an act of "positive leadership," and said he hoped it would "have a rippling effect," causing firms, within and without the investment field, to energetically pursue equal employment opportunity.

Why HOLT Recommends Selected... Deep Discount Convertible Bonds Currently Yielding Up to 13%

Rare in the late 1960's—when convertible bonds were being trumpeted as the ideal "can't miss" investment vehicle—The Holt Investment Advisory emphatically stated that investors should stay away from most of these issues.

Today, however, The Holt Advisory believes the time has come to put some funds in certain of these securities. It has therefore compiled a list of 10 convertible bonds, all listed on the New York Stock Exchange, which it considers to be especially attractive.

In a clear, non-technical analysis Holt explains why these securities deserve the consideration of investors and traders alike in light of prospective developments in both the stock and bond market. For each of the 10 selected convertible bonds, it also presents the specific conversion terms, the current yield and the yield to maturity.

Caution: Not all convertibles are safe investments at this time. Some companies may be too illiquid, and no matter how attractive these securities appear, investment in them involves risks.

BONUS OFFER

If you are interested in securities that offer both high current income and good appreciation potential, we think you'll want to read this Special Study, titled "Deep Discount Convertibles." ## NOTICE TO THE HOLDERS OF BONDS ISSUED UNDER THE FIRST GENERAL BOND RESOLUTION ADOPTED JULY 2, 1975

The Municipal Assistance Corporation For The City of New York (the "Corporation") hereby requests the consent of holders of bonds of the Corporation (the "Bonds") issued under the First General Bond Resolution of the Corporation adopted July 2, 1975, as amended and supplemented to the date hereof (the "Resolution"),* to amendments of Sections 903 and 908 of the Resolution, as described herein.

The Corporation hereby further requests the consent of holders of 1975 Series A Bonds and 1975 Series B Bonds of the Corporation issued under the Resolution and the 1975 Series A Resolution adopted July 2, 1975 and the 1975 Series B Resolution adopted August 13, 1975 (the "Series A and B Resolutions"), respectively, to amendments of the Series A and B Resolutions, as described herein. The following constitute 1975 Series B Bonds:

Denom.	Rate	Denom.	Rate

Term Bonds due 1983	11

Forms of consent to the amendments to the Resolution and to the Series A and B Resolutions are set forth following this Notice and may also be obtained from United States Trust Company of New York, the Trustee under the Resolution, at the address set forth below. Instructions for completion of the consent form are set forth therein. Completed consents should be mailed or delivered by June 10, 1976 to the Trustee at the following address:

United States Trust Company of New York
Attn: Corporate Trust and Agency Services
350 John Street, Third Floor
New York, New York 10038
Telephone (212) 344-3105

The Corporation also hereby requests the consents of holders of 1973 Series C, D, E, H and J Bonds to amendments of each of the Series C, D, E, H and J Series Resolutions under which such Bonds were issued. All of such Bonds are held by certain New York City commercial banks referred to under "Purpose of the Amendments". Such banks may obtain consent forms as to these Series directly from the Corporation.

Although the Corporation has requested that consents be given by June 10, 1976, the Corporation reserves the right from time to time to extend the time for receipt of the requested consents. Consents which have been given may be revoked in the manner set forth below under "Revocation of Consents".

Purpose of the Amendments

The purpose of the amendments hereby requested is to permit the Corporation to carry out certain terms and conditions of the Amended and Restated Agreement dated as of November 29, 1975 (the "Agreement") among the Corporation, certain New York City commercial banks (the "Banks"), the New York City Pension Funds (the "Pension Funds") and New York City Sinking Funds (the "Sinking Funds"), pursuant to which the Banks, the Pension Funds and Sinking Funds agreed to reduce the rate of interest on certain of the Bonds held by them and to rescind certain of the maturities thereof. Without such amendments, the Corporation could not carry out certain terms of the Agreement without being in default under the Resolution. See "Proposed Adjustment." The Agreement was entered into in part in order to reduce the debt service costs to the Corporation on its Bonds and thus indirectly to assist The City of New York (the "City") in meeting its fiscal problems. The total interest savings to the Corporation over the period from 1976 to 1980 that will result from the adjustment described below will range from $78,065,933, if none of the Banks elect the Series A Option described below under "Proposed Adjustment", to a savings of $818,383,680 if all of the Banks elect the Series A Option. See "Additional Information—Effect of Adjustment on the Corporation's Debt Service."

The adjustments in interest rates and maturities, as described below, will not be made in any Bonds except those held by the Banks, Pension Funds and Sinking Funds which are subject to the Agreement.

Proposed Adjustment

Under the Agreement, the Banks, Pension Funds and Sinking Funds, which have advised the Corporation that they hold in the aggregate $1,808,383,000 principal amount of Bonds bearing interest rates varying from 6 1/2 to 11 1/2 per annum and having varying maturities, as described herein, have agreed that as of February 1, 1976, subject to the fulfillment of certain conditions, their Bonds bear interest at the rate of 8 1/2 per year and the principal will be paid on a substantially level debt service basis from February 1, 1977 to February 1, 1986 (the "adjustment"). See "Additional Information—Effect of Adjustment on the Bonds Held by the Banks, Pension Funds and Sinking Funds."

Under the Agreement, certain of the Bonds held by the Banks, as well as by the Pension Funds and Sinking Funds if they so choose, are to be adjusted by amendments to the original Series Resolutions (the "Series Resolutions") under which such Bonds were issued (the "Amending Procedure"), while other Bonds are to be adjusted through an exchange for new Bonds to be issued under a new series resolution called the "1976 Series BB Resolution" (the "Exchange Procedure"). Under either procedure, the Bonds will be adjusted as described above and time will bear interest at 8 1/2 per year payable semi-annually from February 1, 1976, with principal payments being made on each February 1, from 1977 to 1986, the amounts thereof being determined on a substantially level debt service basis.

Series A Option. Under the Agreement, the Banks that hold Series A Term Bonds have the option (the "Series A Option") to retain their Series A Term Bonds at a reduced interest rate of 6 1/2 per year, but otherwise without changing the maturities or the mandatory sinking fund payments on such Bonds. The Banks have advised the Corporation that they hold $94,950,000 aggregate principal amount of Series A Term Bonds due 1985 (the sinking fund for which begins in 1985) and $39,935,000 aggregate principal amount of Series A Term Bonds due 1980 (the sinking fund for which begins in 1986).

Amendment of Section 903 of the Resolution

An amendment of Section 903 of the Resolution is proposed to carry out the Exchange Procedure under the Agreement. Under Section 903, as now in effect, refunding bonds cannot be issued to carry out the Exchange Procedure.

The Board of Directors of the Corporation has adopted, subject to the required Bondholder consent as described under "Vote Required for Amendments of the Resolution", an amendment to Section 903 adding the following new Sections 903(3) and 903(4):

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision or restriction contained in this Section 903 or elsewhere in this Resolution, the Corporation by Series Resolution may authorize, cause to be authorized and deliver Refunding Bonds, being refunding bonds as defined in the Act as amended to the date of delivery of such Refunding Bonds, in exchange for Outstanding Bonds of one or more Series or portion thereof including any maturity or portion of a maturity (the "Refunded Bonds"), with the consent of the Holder or Holders thereof, whether or not the Refunded Bonds are subject to redemption prior to their stated maturity and, if so, without regard to the redemption provisions thereof, including, but not limited to, the time of redemption and redemption premium, if any, provided that (i) the Board determines such refunding to be in fulfillment of one or more of the Corporation's purposes, (ii) the Refunded Bonds are upon the exchange thereof cancelled and no longer Outstanding, and (iii) the Trustee receives the documents required by Section 902."

"(4) The Bonds being refunded pursuant to this Section 903 shall not be deemed Outstanding for the purposes of the documents required by Section 902 deliverable pursuant to this Section 903."

The amendments to Section 903 would permit, subject to certain conditions, new Bonds being issued in exchange for Outstanding Bonds to be treated as Refunding Bonds, notwithstanding that (i) there are no monies being segregated for the Bonds being refunded, (ii) the Bonds being refunded are not subject to redemption, and (iii) a portion of a Series being refunded bears an interest rate lower than Bonds of the Series not being refunded. This method of refunding, by an exchange of Bonds, would be in addition to the method already provided for in Section 903. As now in effect, Section 903 requires each of the conditions referred to in clauses (i) to (iii) to be met.

* Debt service on Bonds issued under the First General Bond Resolution is to be paid from revenues received by the Corporation from the Sales Tax and Stock Transfer Tax. These Bonds are different from the bonds issued (in December 1975 in exchange for certain notes of The City of New York) under the Second General Bond Resolution on which debt service is to be paid from revenues received by the Corporation from the Cigarette, State Aid, and from the Sales Tax and Stock Transfer Tax only on a subordinated basis to the Bonds issued under the Resolution and to the outstanding notes of the Corporation.

Any Refunding Bonds, under the new Section 903(3), must be issued in fulfillment of one or more of the Corporation's purposes, the debt service coverage tests and other requirements of Section 902 for the issuance of Bonds must be met, the Refunded Bonds must be cancelled, and the Refunding Bonds may only be issued with the consent of the persons who are to receive them. The Board of Directors of the Corporation has determined that the Exchange Procedure is in fulfillment of the Corporation's purpose in that it has the effect of reducing the Corporation's debt service costs.

As amended, Section 903 would permit the new Bonds to be issued in the Exchange Procedure to be classified as "refunding bonds" within the meaning of the New York State Municipal Assistance Corporation Act, as amended by the Municipal Assistance Corporation for The City of New York Act, both as amended (the "Act"), the result of which is that the issuance of such Refunding Bonds will not be included in the calculation of the Corporation's compliance with its statutory limitation on the amount of bonds and notes that it may issue. If Section 903 were not so amended, any Bonds issued by the Corporation in the Exchange Procedure would be included in such calculation.

The Corporation is authorized by the Act to issue up to $5,280,000,000 principal amount of bonds and notes, excluding bonds and notes issued to refund outstanding bonds and notes. As of the date hereof, the Corporation has issued against that limit an aggregate of $3,885,460,000 principal amount of bonds (issued under the Resolution and the Second General Bond Resolution) and notes. The Corporation has stated its intention to issue additional bonds in the future and may also be obligated to do so. First, the Corporation recently announced an exchange offer of $500,000,000 principal amount of its bonds to holders of certain City notes, the Corporation reserving the right to issue additional amounts of bonds if additional City notes are tendered. Second, the Corporation has announced its intention to issue in the near future small denomination bonds. Third, under the Agreement, the Pension Funds are obligated to purchase from the City an aggregate of $4,830,000,000 of City bonds; however, the Pension Funds may elect to buy bonds of the Corporation instead of City bonds, up to a certain dollar amount. If the Corporation had to include in the calculation of bonds and notes that it is authorized to issue the Bonds which the Corporation anticipates it might be required to issue under the Exchange Procedure, the Corporation would not be able to carry out all of the commitments described above.

Amendment of Section 908 of the Resolution

An amendment of Section 908 of the Resolution is proposed to carry out the Amending Procedure. Section 908 of the Resolution as now in effect requires extension of the original maturity dates of certain Bonds. See "Amendments to Series Resolutions" for a summary of the amendments being made to the Series Resolutions.

Section 908 of the Resolution (which constitutes a covenant of the Corporation) provides that the Corporation shall not directly or indirectly extend or assent to the extension of the maturity of any of its Bonds by the purchase of such Bonds or by any other arrangement and that, if the maturity of any Bonds shall be so extended, such Bonds shall not be entitled, in the event of a default under the Resolution, to the benefit of the Resolution or to any payment out of the assets or funds of the Corporation until prior payment in full of the Bonds the maturities of which were not so extended.

The Board of Directors of the Corporation has adopted, subject to the required Bondholder consent as described under "Vote Required for Amendments of the Resolution", the following amendment of Section 908:

"908. Extension of Payment of Bonds and Coupons. Except as hereinafter permitted, the [The] Corporation shall not directly or indirectly extend or assent to the extension of the maturity of any of the Bonds or the time of payment of any of the coupons or claims for interest by the purchase or funding of such Bonds, coupons or claims for interest or by any other arrangement unless (i) the Board determines such extension to be in fulfillment of one or more of the Corporation's purposes, (ii) the Holder of such Bonds, coupon or claim for interest consents thereto, (iii) the Trustee receives the documents that would be required by Section 902 (excluding a Series Resolution if not applicable) in the event of an issuance of Bonds, assuming for such purpose that for all computations required for the issuance of a Series of Bonds under Section 902(3) of this Resolution, all Bonds, coupons and claims for interest to be so extended or otherwise modified, as a particular time, as extended or modified, constitute a Series of Bonds to be authorized and delivered and that the Bonds, coupons and claims for interest as they existed prior to such extension or modification are not to be deemed Outstanding for the purposes of documents required to be delivered by Section 902, and (iv) the Corporation publishes within 90 days after the Board shall have taken the action referred to in (i) hereof in an Authorized Newspaper a notice of such extension or proposed extension. In case the maturity of any of the Bonds or the time for payment of any such coupons or claims for interest shall be extended, except as permitted in the foregoing sentence, such Bonds, coupons or claims for interest shall not be entitled in case of any default under this Resolution to the benefit of this Resolution or to any payment out of any assets of the Corporation or the funds (except funds held in trust for the payment of particular Bonds, coupons or claims for interest pursuant to this Resolution) held by the Trustee or any Paying Agent, except subject to the prior payment of the principal of all Bonds issued and outstanding the maturity of which has not been extended and of such portion of the accrued interest on the Bonds as shall not be represented by such extended coupons or claims for interest. Nothing herein shall be deemed to limit the right of the Corporation to issue Bonds of a Refunding Issue as provided in Section 903 and such issuance shall not be deemed to constitute an extension of maturity of Bonds or the time of payment of any of the coupons or claims for interest."

As so amended, Section 908 would permit extensions of maturities of Bonds, or the extension of the time of payment of interest thereon, as long as the following conditions are met: (1) the Board of Directors has determined that such extensions are in fulfillment of the Corporation's purposes, (2) the holders of Bonds subject to such extensions consent thereto, (3) the debt service coverage test of the Resolution is met as if the Bonds affected by the extensions were being newly issued as of the time at which the extensions are given effect, and (4) the Corporation publishes a notice of such extension.

The Corporation would be able to amend its Series Resolutions under Section 908, as amended, and thus carry out the Amending Procedure as long as the debt service coverage test referred to in clause (3) is met as of the closing under the Agreement. The Board of Directors of the Corporation has determined that the Amending Procedure is in fulfillment of the Corporation's purpose in that it has the effect of reducing the Corporation's debt service costs.

Vote Required for Amendments of the Resolution

The amendments to Section 903 and Section 908 of the Resolution described herein require the written consent of the holders of at least two-thirds in principal amount of the Outstanding Bonds under the Resolution ("Outstanding Bonds") to become effective. As of the date hereof, there are Outstanding Bonds in the principal amount of $3,978,835,000 and, accordingly, the consents of holders of $2,652,427,000 are required. Of that amount, the Banks, Pension Funds and Sinking Funds hold $1,808,383,000 in principal amount. The Corporation has no reason to expect that the Banks, Pension Funds and Sinking Funds will not consent to the amendments as they are either necessary or useful for carrying out the Agreement. If all of the Banks, Pension Funds and Sinking Funds consent to the amendments, the consents of other holders of at least $844,194,000 principal amount of Outstanding Bonds will be required for the amendments to become effective. The Corporation has been advised by the Comptroller and the Director of the Budget of the State of New York, which holds $350,000,000 of Series V and AA Bonds, that the State intends to consent to the amendments.

If the amendment to Section 908 were not consented to by holders of a requisite principal amount of Bonds, the Corporation would not be able to carry out the provisions of the Agreement because Section 908, as now in effect, would prohibit the maturity of any Bonds from being extended by the Corporation as required by the Amending Procedure. See "Amendment of Section 908 of the Resolution." If the amendment to Section 908 were to receive the requisite consents, the Corporation could carry out the Agreement even if the amendment to Section 903 were not consented to by the holders of the requisite principal amount of Bonds; however, as discussed under "Amendment of Section 903 of the Resolution", the adjustment in the absence of a Section 903 amendment would cause Bonds issued in the Exchange Procedure to be included in the calculation of the total amount of bonds and notes that the Corporation is authorized to issue under the Act. See also "Procedure for Amendments to Become Effective."

Amendments of Series Resolutions

In order to carry out the Amending Procedure (see "Proposed Adjustment"), each of the relevant Series Resolutions heretofore adopted under the Resolution will be amended to reflect the revised interest rate and payment schedules pursuant to the Agreement. In addition, each of the relevant Series Resolutions will be amended to provide a method for identifying the particular Bonds being adjusted and assigning to those Bonds an adjusted interest rate of 8 1/2 per annum and adjusted serial maturities, as well as to permit the Bonds that are adjusted under the Amending Procedure to be held in stamped form (that is, with a legend reflecting the fact that the terms of such Bonds have been adjusted), or in such other form as may be acceptable to the Corporation, unless they are exchanged for Bonds of the same Series reflecting the adjusted terms. Such amendments have been authorized by the Board of Directors of the Corporation subject to the required Bondholder approval. The consents of the holders of at least two-thirds in principal amount of the Bonds of each Series so affected is required to approve these amendments, as well as the consents of holders of at least two-thirds in principal amount of the Term Bonds by maturity in each Series. In addition, the consents of the holders of all Bonds subject to the Amending Procedure is required.

The Banks own all of the Bonds issued under the Series Resolutions proposed to be amended, except those issued under the Series A and B Resolutions, of which the Banks own some, but not all.

The amendments of the Series Resolutions will affect the interest rates as held by the Banks only. Because of the adjustment under the Agreement, will result, subject to the Series A Option (see "Proposed Adjustment"), w Term Bonds and Series B Term Bonds held by holders other than the B Before adjustment, the average life of the Series A Term Bonds due 1985, die 1980 and the Series B Term Bonds due 1983 held by non-Bank Holder respectively. Method of Screening for Breast Cancer
Without Visiting Doctor Gets a Patent

By STACY V. JONES
WASHINGTON, June 4

A new method invented by Government specialists is intended to enable women to undergo mass screening for breast cancer without visiting doctors. Equipment that can be worn in the brassiere for several days compares the temperature of the breasts, relatively high temperature in one area indicates the presence of a tumor. The diagnostic procedure and apparatus were patented this week for the Energy Research and Development Administration by James D. Doss and Charles W. McCabe, staff members at the Los Alamos scientific laboratory. Patent 3,960,138 was granted.

The potentials of the method are being clinically tested at the University of Arizona.

Message on a Bike

Luther G. Simjian of Greenwich, Conn., has begun production of what he has acquired a trademark on—the Figuretone Exercising Bike. It offers a combination of pedaling and massaging of the midriff.

Patent 3,960,144 was granted Mr. Simjian this week. He has applied for others in Canada, France and West Germany, and has sent one of the machines to Germany for demonstration.

A stationary support holds a pair of pedals and a seat. A rotating arm holds a massaging belt to be secured to the torso. While the operator is pedaling, the belt is moved back and forth in a half circle. Or it can be disconnected to concentrate on cycling without massaging.

Mr. Simjian, who operates General Research Inc. in Greenwich, has been granted more than 200 patents in the last 40 years. He is credited with the first patent on an automatic focusing camera, and many others in optics and electronics. He has half a dozen on exercisers, but considers this week's the final answer.

stalled nearly a century ago. The device, protected by Patent 3,961,246, which is assigned to the Schonstedt Instrument Company, has two adjustable sensors and is suitable for exploring weak magnetic fields. It serves to trace rods that have been trapped into the earth, or a manhole cover that is now under a paved street. Mr. Schonstedt compares it with the instruments that can be used to check airline passengers for possession of guns.

Besides such locators, the company makes scientific instruments that are used by geologists in tracing rock samples, and other employees in space satellites. One recently helped discover a magnetic field on the planet Mercury.

The company was founded 24 years ago in Silver Spring, Md., and moved to Reston in 1968.

Information at Zoo

The Portland Zoological Society, Portland, Ore., received a patent this week for an audio information device that enables a zoo visitor to obtain information on a display, such as a live elephant, by dropping a coin in a slot.

Ronald A. Fial and Hal Markowitz were awarded Patent 3,960,254 for the equipment, which includes a recording tape to be played back with a message about the subject of interest. The patent pictures a man standing at a viewer station near the platform on which an elephant is walking. He is listening through an earphone, and has evidently inserted a coin.

It is explained that commonly used information devices broadcast information to a loudspeaker, and many are not interested, or are concentrating on another exhibit than that being described. The new invention is intended to give a brief transmission that will interest individuals and to bring the zoo some income.

Joblessness Reduced to 17-Month Low roll employment has risen 2.7 million, or an average of 225,000 a month, a large increase even for an economy that is moving up out of a recession.

Even what the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations assert is the "true" unemployment rate has been coming down, however. It averaged 11.6 percent for all of 1975 and has been dropping steadily each month this year.

Other key aspects of the job situation, as reported by the Labor Department, included the following: Employment on regular payrolls of businesses and government rose only slightly but would have gone up by 150,000 except for strikes. Since the recession low of June 1974, payroll employment has risen 2.7 million, or an average of 225,000 a month, a large increase even for an economy that is moving up out of a recession.

The number of persons in the civilian labor force—that is, those who were employed and those actively looking for work—held about steady at 94.6 million following an unusually large rise in April.

Over the last 12 months, the expansion in the labor force has totaled 1.8 million, with adult women accounting for 1.1 million of the gain, adult men 500,000 and teen-agers 200,000.

The department's hourly earnings index, considered to be a good early warning signal of inflationary pressures, rose by seven-tenths of 1 percent, a

William Trainer, a security analyst for Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Smith, as to why Simplicity's market share had dropped from 60 percent to 56 percent. Mr. Shapiro cited a 101-day work stoppage which was followed by the store closings of a number of Simplicity retail accounts.

"Hopefully," he said, "we will improve our market share." However, he added that the home-sewing industry was still in a recession, mainly because there were "no fashion changes to excite women" and dresses are "not an important item." "We see this year as flat," said Mr. Shapiro. "Unit sales are down."

When Mr. Gilbert said he objected to the $120,000 a year for 10 years that "my friend, Mr. Shapiro, will get," the Simplicity chairman snapped, "If you object to that, you're not my friend."

Price-Fixing Is Charged
WASHINGTON, June 4 (UPI)—Federal grand jury charged four corporations, and two of their officers today with conspiring to fix prices on aluminum sliding doors and windows sold to contractors in the Los Angeles area.

United States Steel said its increases would be effective July 16, and that the overall effect on the company's full product line would be an increase averaging 1.7 percent.

In its announcement, Jones & Laughlin, the seventh largest producer, said it was raising prices on "junior beams," used in the mobile home industry, by $15 a ton on June 14 and by another $15 a ton on July 16. It said prices on other structural shapes would be increased by $20 a ton on July 16.

The company said it would recover "only a portion" of its cost increases, and that on an annual basis the increases would add less than one half of 1 percent to its total revenues. Arco was reported to have raised prices on standard structural and "wide flanges" by $20 a ton.

Geothermal Energy Unit Dedicated

Government and utility officials dedicated yesterday a geothermal energy test facility in southern California. At Niland, near the Salton Sea north of the Imperial Valley, salty steam from deep wells temporarily ran a turbine generator to light up a battery of 10 large light bulbs, each of 1,500 watts.

A generator will be hooked up regularly to the steam only after a two-year, $8 million program of tests jointly sponsored by the Energy Research and Development Administration and the San Diego Gas and Electric Company.

Compromise on Alaska Gas Line

WASHINGTON, June 4 (AP)—Senators who had advocated competing routes for a proposed Alaska natural gas pipeline joined today in sponsoring compromise legislation designed to speed a final decision. The new legislation would give the President the authority to decide which route the pipeline would follow, but would allow either house of Congress to override his choice. And it would decree that a go-ahead for construction be issued no later than the end of 1977.

The measure would clear the way for a decision on the gas pipeline in much the same manner that was used by Congress in 1973 to expedite work on the trans-Alaska oil pipeline, now under construction.

British Auto Output Rises Sharply

LONDON, June 4 (UPI)—Car production in Britain jumped 76 percent last month over the 1975 period as the British Leyland Motor Corporation surmounted its labor problems and attempted to make up lost ground. Figures today from the Department of Industry showed that output at 127,000 compared with the exceptionally low 72,000 in May of last year. In the first five months of this year total car production was 3 percent above the 1975 period.

ment greater power to enforce the laws. The commission would be composed of four members each from the executive branch, the Senate and the House of Representatives and six from private life.

All other amendments offered at today's session, with one minor exception, were rejected in a series of roll-call votes. The defeated amendments attempted to modify a section of the bill permitting state attorneys general to bring class-action type suits on behalf of consumers for price-fixing or other antitrust violations.

The closest vote was on an amendment by Senator Roman L. Hruska, Republican of Nebraska, to bar states from hiring private lawyers on a contingency fee basis to bring such suits. A House-passed antitrust bill had this, but the Hruska amendment was tabled by a vote of 39 to 34.

Another Hruska amendment, tabled by 49 to 19, would have required individual notice to all persons on whose behalf a suit was brought who could be identified with reasonable effort.

Senator Robert Morgan, Democrat of North Carolina, said this would involve such tremendous cost that it would prevent any suits from being brought. The bill provides for notice by publication, although a judge may order further steps, he added.

is Government pressure for a rollback. United States Steel said its increases would be effective July 16, and that the overall effect on the company's full product line would be an increase averaging 1.7 percent.

In its announcement, Jones & Laughlin, the seventh largest producer, said it was raising prices on "junior beams," used in the mobile home industry, by $15 a ton on June 14 and by another $15 a ton on July 16. It said prices on other structural shapes would be increased by $20 a ton on July 16.

The company said it would recover "only a portion" of its cost increases, and that on an annual basis the increases would add less than one half of 1 percent to its total revenues. Arco was reported to have raised prices on standard structural and "wide flanges" by $20 a ton.

OIL DEAL STUDIED BY PETRO-CANADA

Purchase of Some Assets of Atlantic Richfield Possible

By HERBERT KOSHEZ... Petro-Canada, the Canadian Government oil company, said in Ottawa, yesterday it was considering purchasing between $300 million and $350 million of Atlantic Richfield's Canadian assets and not the whole company which was valued at $400 million in the original sale offer.

Atlantic Richfield Canada started discussions with Petro-Canada for the sale of 100 percent of its common shares. The purchase price was based on reserve and engineering valuation of the assets of Atlantic Richfield Canada consisting of gas and oil rights on 11.4 million acres in Canada, a substantial portion of which are in the Hudson Bay area and the Arctic islands.

Petro-Canada had 90 days to review and verify the data furnished. It is now waiting for a formal reply from Atlantic Richfield before deciding whether to begin negotiations on the purchase.

Atlantic Richfield Canada has already sold its oil and gas holdings in Saskatchewan, leaving assets mainly in Alberta, Canada's principal oil-producing province.

Westmoreland Plans Merger With Continental Conveyor... The Westmoreland Coal Company announced yesterday in Philadelphia that it was negotiating with the Continental Conveyor and Equipment Company for the possible merger of the two companies in an exchange of stock worth about $26.4 million.

Under the proposed terms, one share of Westmoreland Coal common would be exchanged for every two-and-one-half shares of Continental.

A spokesman for Westmoreland said about 443,200 shares of Westmoreland stock would be involved.

Westmoreland is engaged principally in the mining and preparation or soft coal for the steel industry and electric utilities. It reported sales for 1975 of $451.5 million and a net income of $60.2 million, or $8.32 a share.

Continental Conveyor makes and sells materials handling equipment, cotton ginning machinery and undercarriage systems for mobile homes.

Armstrong Cork Agrees To Sell Land in Southeast... The Armstrong Cork Company announced yesterday that it had signed an agreement to sell about 49,000 acres of woodland to a major developer of natural resources for $21 million. It declined to identify the purchaser.

About 29,000 acres of the land is in Northwestern Florida and the rest in Georgia and southern South Carolina. The company said it would retain 100,000 acres in Georgia to meet raw-material needs of its plant in Macon.

White Motor Announces Agreement to Sell Division... The White Motor Corporation of Cleveland, which is suing White Consolidated Industries for alleged failure to go through with a proposed merger of the two companies, announced that directors of Cooper Industries had approved the acquisition of White Motor's Superior division for $36.5 million in cash.

Gulf and Western Extends Its Offer for Signal Stock... Gulf and Western Industries said yesterday it had extended until 3 P.M. Los Angeles time June 11 its tender offer to buy shares of Signal Companies, maker of Mack trucks, tractors, aerospace and industrial products. The offer was due to expire yesterday.

Corporation Affairs Bank of America Signs Loan for East Germany

The Bank of America announced the signing of a $175 million syndicate loan to the Deutsche Aussenhandelsbank, the principal foreign trade bank of East Germany.

This is the largest loan syndicated in the Eurodollar market for East Germany and the first syndicated loan to the Deutsche Aussenhandelsbank to be led by an American bank.

The loan will be utilized for the development of East Germany's export industries, including the machine tool, electric technical and electronics industries.

A total of 38 banks are participating in the loan. Managers of the $175 million floating rate loan are the Bank of America, the Bank of Montreal, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, Citicorp International, First Chicago Manufacturers, Hanover, the Security Pacific National Bank and the Toronto-Dominion Bank.

Lachmar Is Formed To Build Gas Tankers... The Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Company, the General Dynamics Corporation and a unit of Moore McCormack Resources said yesterday that units of the three concerns had created a partnership to construct and operate two cryogenic tankers for the transport of liquefied natural gas from Algeria to the United States.

The partnership, which will operate under the name Lachmar, will be 40 percent owned by a unit of Panhandle Eastern with another 40 percent interest held by a unit of General Dynamics and a 20 percent interest held by a unit of Moore McCormack.

Occidental Sanguine In Venezuelan Case... The Occidental Petroleum Company said yesterday it was confident that the company would be cleared of charges of illegal activity despite a Venezuelan Congressional Committee's finding that the company had bribed Venezuelan officials to obtain oil concessions.

The Venezuelan committee, comprised of members of political parties, said on Thursday it had concluded unanimously that Occidental had bribed Venezuelan officials and would present its report to the Venezuelan Congress on Monday.

If the Venezuelan Congress approves the report, it could ask the Government not to compensate Occidental for its assets and installations that were nationalized along with those of all other foreign oil companies operating in Venezuela last Jan. 1.

A spokesman for Occidental said that although the company had not seen a copy of the committee's report, "we believe it is based only on speculation and that the committee has not found the evidence of illegal conduct on the part of Occidental."

Michelin to Build 2 American Plants... The Michelin Tire Company plans to build two plants in the United States, according to the company's annual report. The report, which was released in Paris, gives no details of the plants.

The French tire maker already operates two plants in South Carolina. Last November, the company bought a 150-acre site at Spartanburg, S.C., close to the two existing facilities.

Aramco Contract To American Concerns... The United States Fitter Corporation announced yesterday that its subsidiary, the Resource Services Corporation, and Federal Electric International had been awarded a $35 million contract for support services in Saudi Arabia by the Arabian American Oil Company.

The contract calls for Holmes & Narver, a subsidiary of Resource Services, to provide maintenance and operations services and for Federal Electric to provide catering and housekeeping services for a construction camp and family housing complex at Safaniya, Saudi Arabia.

Burroughs Develops Editing System... The Burroughs Corporation announced that its Redactor Company subsidiary had developed a new text editing system that provides up to three times the productivity of many systems currently in use.

Burroughs said that the new system used a full-page, 5,000-character cathode ray tube visual display, magnetic storage, and an optional 220 lines per minute high-speed printer. The company said the new system would make high-volume electronic text editing and information retrieval economically feasible for most companies.

CITIBANK RAISES ITS PRIME TO 7 1/4%

percent level reached yesterday. In their efforts to maintain lending profitability, the banks try to maintain a spread between their money costs and the rates they charge. Thus, when money costs go up, as reflected in money market rates, the prime rate is usually increased.

Citibank often is the leader in prime rate changes. Its changes are nearly always announced on Friday mornings, after the Federal Reserve's weekly survey of money market statistics comes out Thursday afternoon.

Yesterday, the formula that Citibank uses in calculating its prime rate called for a lending charge of 7 1/4 percent. Since the bank moves its prime only in quarter-point increments, a rate of 7 1/2 percent was called for.

Speculation was heard in the money market yesterday that still further rate increases might be in store for next Friday, if market rates continue to increase. The Federal Reserve has given no indication that a more relaxed posture on monetary policy is likely for the near future.

shared among refiners and importers on the basis of their volumes. One sticky question is certain to be partial relief or outright exemption for small refiners and for certain types of importers, such as airlines and utilities, which are not in the oil business.

Officials also expect that their request for comments will be the industry's most creative thinking on tax issues, such as depreciation. Officials concede that stored petroleum products deteriorate, but they insist that unrefined crude oil does not.

Oil Price Safeguard Urged... WASHINGTON, June 4 (AP)—Administration officials told Congress today that the need for a financial "safety net" to protect industrialized nations against excessive oil import prices was more urgent now than when first proposed a year ago.

The Secretary of the Treasury, William E. Simon, and the Deputy Secretary of State, Charles W. Robinson, testified before the Senate Banking Committee in support of legislation to authorize United States participation in a $25 billion financial support fund for nations of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development.

They drew expressions of skepticism from Chairman William Proxmire, Democrat of Wisconsin, and Senator John Tower, Republican of Texas. Senator Proxmire asked whether the fund, in which the United States share would be about $7 billion, might constitute a "bailout" of multinational banks. Senator Tower said he was concerned about "disrupting the discipline of the market place."

Cotton Futures Climb by Limit; Soviet Reported to Seek Broilers

been moving up sharply resulting with July closing at 71.35 cents a pound. The anticipation of a small crop, though somewhat larger than last year's,
mand are factors behind the rising prices.

Gold futures, in the news because of the recent International Monetary Fund auction at $128 an ounce, moved lower.
The current delivery month of June closed at $126.80, down from $128.10 on the Commodity Exchange.

Soybeans and corn showed strength on the Chicago Board of Trade, amid some reports of
portedly some foreign buyers are in the wings hoping for a break in prices. July beans closed at $5.85 a bushel, up 6 1/2 cents, while July corn closed at $2.97, up about 2 cents.

Trading by local traders on the floor was limited yesterday

DOLLAR GAINING ON SWISS FRANC

foreign-exchange dealers said.
They attributed the recovery in part to profit taking by speculators who had sold the steady falling British currency short.
Today they were buying pounds for delivery as promised when they "sold" it earlier for higher prices.

The same process, but in reverse, was cited in Zurich, as another reason for the Swiss franc's drop.

Dealers said a further reason for the pound's advance today was that speculators were foreseeing possible Government action to support the currency, which has fallen from $2 since March 5. Government officials and some bankers say it is now greatly undervalued.

Elsewhere in Europe, the dollar closed today in Frankfurt at 2.5822 West German marks, down from yesterday's 2.5833
Thursday, in Paris at 4.7202;
French francs, up from 4.7202;
in Milan at 847.45 Italian lire,

Gold bullion prices fell in both London and Zurich, the two major European exchanges, the wake of the International Monetary Fund's first massive gold auction. The metal was down 40 cents to $126.85 a troy

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., June 4
(UP)—Barnett Bank of Florida, a $2 billion bank holding company, is breaking with tradition by pressing Wall Street and offering $10 million worth of investment notes directly to the public.

The notes, in amounts as low as $1,000 at 9 percent interest, went on sale earlier this week at Barnett Banks around the state.

Thomas Durr, corporate secretary, said today it was the first time such an offer had been made in Florida and that Barnett was the largest bank or bank holding company in the country to try it.

In making a direct offer to the public, Barnett seeks to save commissions paid to securities brokers, create a new market for its debt and force brokers to offer "better" terms in handling future sales.

George Snelling vice president for planning, said Wall Street had been down on bank stocks in general and Florida bank issues in particular, causing interest rates available to be inflated when banks sold other securities to raise cash.

City Warns Unions to Cut Back Fringes

By LEE DENBART
Citywide negotiations for new labor contracts covering 150,000 workers opened yesterday with the city telling the unions that they must give up $24 million in fringe benefits or face further layoffs.

sions. There will be no cutbacks.
The opening session of the negotiations was held in a conference room of Mr. Gotham's union at 140 Park Place. Each union bargains separately on salaries, although one pattern is struck that then applies to all. But the unions bargain together on fringe benefits, which was the reason for yesterday's meeting.

Letter on City's Fiscal

Following is the text of a letter transmitted from Stephen Berger, executive director of the Emergency Financial Control Board, to Mayor Carey and other members of the board in connection with his analysis of the city's fiscal situation.
Pursuant to the direction of the members of the Emergency Financial Control Board, the staff of the Board has analyzed the New York City expense budget for fiscal year 1977, particularly as it reflects expenditure reduction measures outlined in the revised city financial plan presented to the board by the city on March 28.

Albany's Aid to City U. Said to Exceed the Plan

MINNESOTA operates the Tuition Assistance Program for financial aid to college students, places the total cost to the state from the entry of City University students into the program at about $43 million in 1976-77, according to Graeme Baxter, vice president of the quasi-public corporation.

The program for university financing proposed by Governor Carey, however, and similar versions advanced by Democratic leaders of the legislature, are based on an assumed cost of about $35 million. The difference, according to Miss Baxter, lies in the uncertainty over the effect of State University, which level tuition on the size of City University's enrollment next fall.

The difference in estimates points up an enormous area of uncertainty that exists in the preparations to provide and deliver financial aid to a sudden influx of more than 100,000—by the most conservative estimates—City University students.

The Board of Higher Education last Tuesday approved tuition for undergraduates ending a 129-year tradition of free education.

As the university ended the first week of its shutdown yesterday, Irwin Pillsbuck, president of the faculty union, appeared at Governor Carey's office, where the Emergency Financial Control Board was meeting, and demanded that the city release money intended for June to cover the default on employees' May paychecks, so that university could be reopened Monday.

University's enrollment next fall. We don't think it will reduce it by that much, or if it did, it would be the middle class that is more likely to leave," Miss Baxter said. The higher the income, the smaller the award, so the departure of middle-class students would have less money to the program than the departure of low-income students.

Paperwork Barrier

Meanwhile, with the City University closed down, Alan S. Miskin, its financial-aid director, said yesterday that time was running out for organizing personnel to help students file their TAP application forms.

Many within the university have speculated that the "paper barrier" presented by the applications, which for the assistance program alone include 26 questions eliciting such information as parents' New York State net taxable income—in formation many students do not have at their finger tips—will discourage large numbers of students from the university.

Kibbee's Estimate

He stressed that Dr. Robert J. Kibbee, the City University's chancellor, "was willing to take a chance that the Legislature will do the right thing on Monday, we can open the university at the beginning of the week and do the right thing for the students." The shutdown interrupted final examinations, receipt of grades, and commencement.

The Tuition Assistance Program, known as TAP, provides grants to state residents on a graduated scale according to income, similar to the Federal program known as the Basic Opportunity Grant. State officials have estimated that the two programs combined will cover complete costs of tuition for nearly half the full-time undergraduates in City University.

The $35 million contained in the Carey proposal is predicted on the 10,000 students that Dr. Kibbee has estimated will leave the university because of tuition, thus reducing the num-

CBS Ordered to Pay $250,000

In Trespass by TV News Crew

A three-day trial, the jury reported in a memorandum filed with the court that it had come to its decision because Lucille Rich, a reporter for the CBS local 6 o'clock news program, had entered the restaurant at 14 East 52d Street without permission. It also said it awarded the punitive damages because she and her crew had taken pictures.

CBS entered Le Mistral without permission, and with cameras rolling, with a purpose other than using the services of the establishment," the jury said.

Rich and her crew went to Le Mistral in July 1972. According to court papers, the crew entered the premises "with cameras rolling" and Miss Rich approached a member of the staff and identified herself as a reporter. The crew was ordered to leave and it did.

Confrontation Televised

That night the confrontation at the restaurant was televised. John F. Lang of Saxe, Bacon and Bolan, who represented Le Mistral, argued that punitive and compensatory damages should be awarded to the restaurant because the crew was guilty of trespass when it entered without permission and continued to film.

Gordon T. King of Coedert Brothers, who represented CBS, took the position that CBS did not encroach upon the privacy

The Great Belmont Stakes

The classic event for three-year-olds.

Today at Belmont Park, Bold Forbes, winner of the Kentucky Derby, and his jockey Angel Cordero, take on one of racing's greatest challenges in the classic Belmont Stakes.

The big question is can they win in this demanding mile-and-a-half test. Speed alone won't win. It's going to take stamina and a great heart. Because in this final leg of racing's Triple Crown, it's a long way to the finish line. And the Belmont Stakes always attracts a field of top three-year-olds.

If you've never seen a great race in person, this is the one to start with!

And that's not all. Throughout the day, Belmont Park will continue its festival of live, big name music...

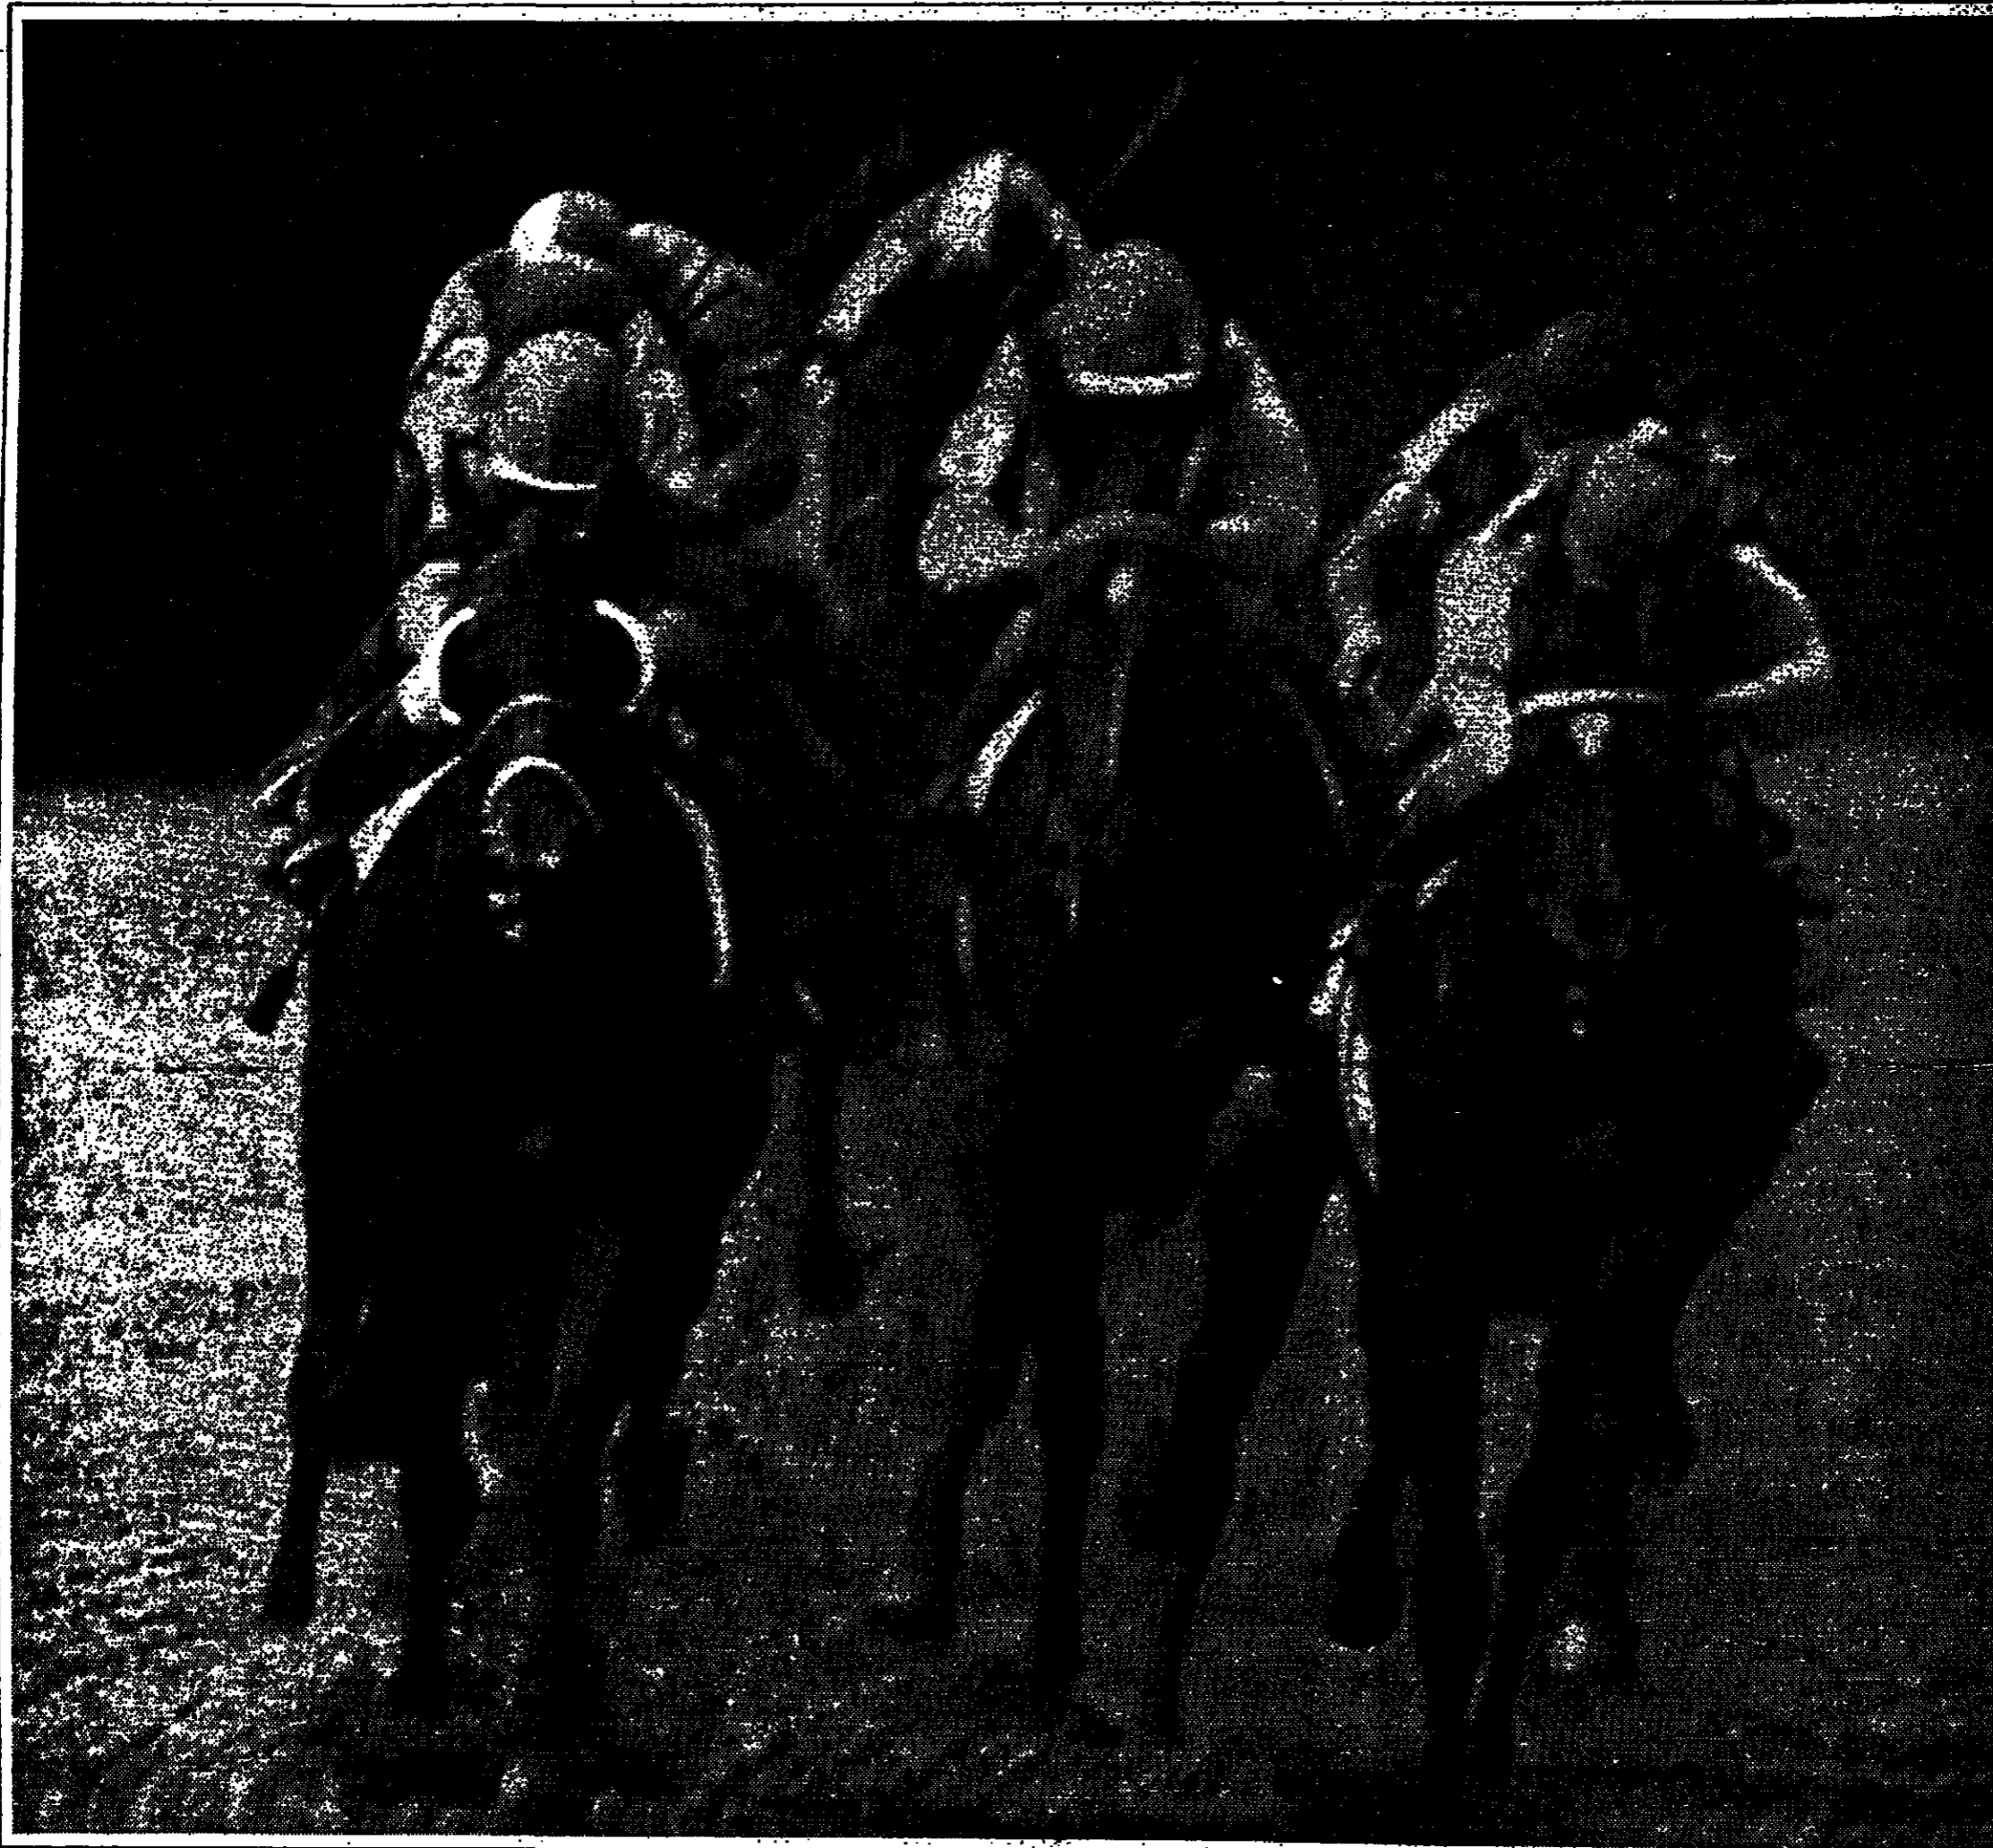

It's in the Backyard Bandstand, starting at 12:15.

Tito Puente...Celia Cruz...the Up With People group. All for the $2 grandstand admission.

Plus there's great food, such as fried chicken, corn-on-the-cob and even banana splits. Come early and make it a picnic in the lovely country setting of Belmont Park. It's all just a short ride from Midtown and there's plenty of parking.

So come out to Beautiful Belmont Park today for the Belmont Stakes. And on Sunday for more exciting Thoroughbred racing.

Gates open at 11. First race 1:30.

Special trains (LIRR) and buses can take you directly to the track. For information, call (212) 641-4700, ext.
